STORM TAKES BIG TOLL IN BRAZIL CITY

Estimates of Deaths in Bahia and District Run as High as 400

HOWES LEFT IN RUINS BY TORRENTIAL RAINS

BAHIA, Brazil, May 4 (AP).—A "state of public calamity" was officially proclaimed in this city of 330,000 population today after five consecutive days of unprecedented wind and rain storms that took an unknown toll of life.

Authorities estimated that at least sixty persons died in the storms, while unofficial estimates for Bahia and the surrounding area ran as high as 400. Hundreds of persons were injured.

The howling winds and the driving rains abated somewhat tonight, enabling authorities to go ahead with hastily formed plans for relief. They estimated that without homes at 1,000 or more. Alma houses and army barracks were used for homeless.

SUPPLIES RUNNING LOW

Stoppage of railroad traffic resulted in skyrocketing prices for foodstuffs when it became known that supplies were running low. It was believed that at least 500 homes in the city and suburbs collapsed, either as a result of the torrential rains or landslides roaring down from the hills.

The famous old Hotel Paris looking out on Bahia's Bay, which rivals Rio de Janeiro for beauty, was in ruins, as was many another historic building.

CITY IN DARKNESS

The city was in darkness tonight with no immediate prospects for lights. Deep ravines appeared among the graves in the municipal cemetery.

The municipal elevator connecting the lower part of the city at sea level with the upper part on bluffs was damaged and service paralyzed.

WILL NOT SIGN WITH ENTENTE

Hungary Makes Her Policy Clear in Matter of Assistance Pacts

VENICE, Italy, May 4 (AP).—Hungary's delegates to the Tri-Power Conference said tonight their country proposed to sign mutual assistance pacts with Italy and Austria but refused to sign them with the Little Entente powers.

That flat assertion came after the Hungarian delegates spent three and a half hours conferring with representatives of Italy and Austria in an effort to lay the groundwork for the Nine-Power Danubian Conference at Rome in June.

Mutual assistance pacts with Italy and Austria would strengthen the Rome conference accord among the three powers, the Hungarians said.

REASONS CITED

They cited two reasons for their refusal regarding the Little Entente. 1. Such pacts would recognize Hungary's present boundaries as defined in the post-war treaties—something she will never do. 2. The pacts would present an armed front to Germany—something Hungary does not wish.

Seven Killed In Crash of Big Airplane

BERLIN, May 4 (AP).—A big Junkers passenger plane missing for days was found crashed near the Czech border, with all seven of its occupants dead, the Air Ministry announced today.

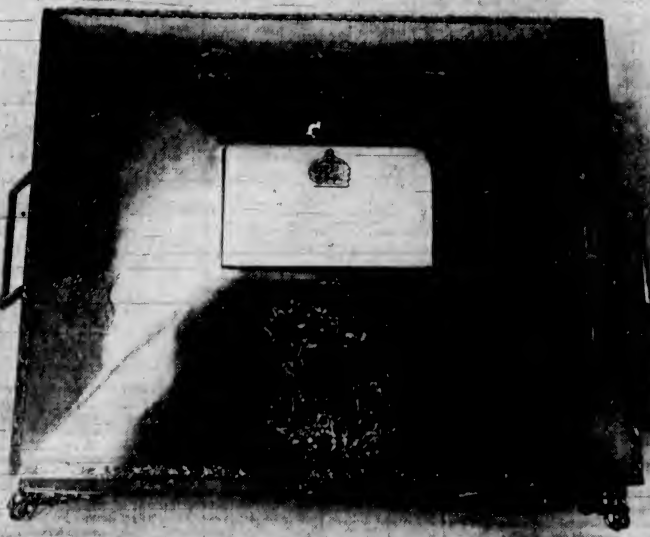

Among those killed in the crash was Major-General Hoernig, of the German Reichwehr (regular army), his wife and child.

The ship apparently lost its bearings in a fog April 30 and crashed up against the Schneberg Mountain in the Fichte chain, the ministry reported.

Jumped to Death In Fear of Fire

QUEBEC, May 4 (CP).—Panic-stricken as fire raced through the flat beneath her home, Mrs. J. Lamontagne, sixty, leaped from a third-story window today and was fatally injured. Her two sons, Armand, twenty-four, and Robert, twenty-one, jumped from the second floor and were slightly injured. The flames never reached the Lamontagne's quarters on the second and third stories of the building.

Canada's Jubilee Gift to His Majesty

Perhaps the most precious single shipment that ever left Canada for Britain was placed in the strong box of the Cunard-White Star liner Aquitania at New York last week-end. This is none other than Canada's gift box to King George. It is a gold box measuring 18x14x3 inches, elaborately decorated with hand-engraved crests of the nine Canadian provinces and the Dominion coat-of-arms, with maple leaf and crown borders. The box was designed and made by Henry Birks & Sons, and its inscription reads: "To His Most Excellent Majesty King George V. From the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada on the Occasion of His Majesty's Silver Jubilee, 1935." It will be presented to the King on May 8.

VICTORIA WILL JOIN EMPIRE OBSERVANCE OF SILVER JUBILEE

Millions Surge Through London's Streets Tying Up Traffic

LONDON, May 4 (AP).—The grand old dame of the world's great cities put on her war paint tonight. While thousands of merchants feverishly batted down their windows and policemen made heroic effort to unlace strangled traffic, a crowd of millions surged through the West End area in gloriously exultant confusion.

From Buckingham Palace, where tens of thousands gathered hoping to glimpse the Royal Family, through Oxford and Bond Streets, Piccadilly Circus, Trafalgar Square and the Strand, it was the same delirious spectacle.

At midnight, with buses virtually halted in Piccadilly and Trafalgar Square, thousands living in outlying districts appeared to be stranded for the night.

LONG BEACH, May 4.—The appearance of a huge sea serpent a few miles from the eastern end of Long Beach was reported by Thomas Taylor, a Ucluelet troller, when he returned from the fishing banks last Sunday afternoon. The report has caused no little consternation among the fishermen and the local residents.

WARN GENERAL TO MEND HIS WAYS

Japanese Allege Chinese Violations Of Demilitarized Zone by Moving in Soldiers

TOKIO, May 4 (AP).—Japan has threatened "drastic action" in North China, alleging Chinese violations of a demilitarized zone, the Renzo (Japanese News Agency) reported today from Hankin, Manchukuo.

The Japanese Army, "because of an insincere Chinese attitude, has come to a serious decision," the agency reported. "It cannot permit such actions as the flouting of the Tangku Agreement and must take drastic action unless Yu Hsueh Chung reflects and mends his ways."

General Yu Hsueh Chung, chairman of the Provincial Government at Hopen, China, was accused of moving soldiers into forbidden areas of the demilitarized zone on April 30.

JAPAN AND VATICAN ESTABLISH RELATIONS

VATICAN CITY, May 4 (AP).—Japan and this religious state will establish mutual diplomatic relations for the first time in history shortly, prelates said today.

A Japanese ministry-or embassy will be attached to the Holy See, these sources said, while Pope Pius will elevate the Apostolic delegation to Tokyo to the rank of a papal nunciature.

The Durkin boy and John Coogan, Sr., were thrown from the car, their bodies crashing against the huge rocks lining the embankment. Coogan told a passing motorist, who carried him to Pine Valley. A priest was with Jackie tonight at the grocery store.

ISTANBUL, May 4 (AP).—Violent earthquakes spreading death and destruction over Turkey today were reported to have started Mount Ararat, the 17,000-foot Armenian peak where tradition says Noah's Ark landed, rumbling with volcanic activity.

Reports said two more violent shocks in the series of earthquakes racking the region had raised the estimated toll of dead and injured to 2,000. A total of 1,600 houses were said to have been destroyed, with twenty-five villages completely wiped out.

GIRL CLERKS HELP POLICE TAKE BANDIT

Employees of Liquor Store Outwit Bandit in Robbery Attempt at Tacoma

SUSPECT CAPTURED AFTER GUN BATTLE

TACOMA, May 4 (AP).—An attempt to hold up the downtown State Liquor Store here tonight ended with the holdup suspect shot in the arm, and his arrest near Summer after a duel with a Tacoma policeman.

The quick wit and daring of two girl clerks at the liquor store, the policeman and a taxicab driver, resulted in the suspect's capture. He gave the name of Earl Gale, twenty-seven, of Seattle. Both Clarence Rolison, the police officer, and Joseph Fisher, taxi driver, were unaware during the chase and after the arrest that Gale was suspected of trying to hold up the liquor store.

WAITS IN LINE

As the crime was reconstructed this evening by police, Gale chartered the taxicab and ordered Fisher to drive to the liquor store and wait while he made a purchase. The robber waited in line until he got to the cashier's window, where he suddenly pulled a pistol and leveled it at Miss Myrtle Kittleson.

"Hand over your money," he ordered.

Instead of obeying she shoved the cash drawer shut, automatically locking it.

Realizing he could not get into the cash drawer the robber backed away, waving his pistol at other clerks and some fifteen customers. Another woman clerk managed to

NO SUSPICION AGAINST JAPAN

Government of Philippines Makes No Charges Regarding Revolt

MANILA, May 4 (AP).—While acting Governor-General Joseph R. Hayden was announcing that the Government had no suspicion or evidence that Japan had a hand in the bloody Sakdalins revolt, other insular leaders discussed today the feasibility of extraditing Benigno Ramos, Sakdal leader from Tokyo, on extradition charges.

"The insular Government has no suspicion or evidence that the Japanese were in any way implicated," said Hayden on his arrival here after a high-speed dash from a remote mountain province.

OFFICIALS TO CONFER

Secretary of the Interior Teodoro Sison, said he would confer with Secretary of Justice Jose Yulo on whether to seek the return here of the stocky little extremist who had just revealed he was seeking to enlist aid for his cause in Japan.

Insular authorities said a treaty between the United States and Japan provided means for extraditing the nationals of either country for certain offenses, but that the granting of a request such as in the present case was optional.

"They raised the question of whether Japan might consider Japan a political refugee and decline to turn him over to Philippine authorities."

MORE DEATHS IN ALASKA FEARED

Epidemic of Influenza at Point Barrow Believed to Have Reached Its Crest

SEATTLE, May 4 (AP).—Several more deaths may be expected from the influenza epidemic at Point Barrow, Alaska's northernmost settlement, although the siege has probably reached its "crest," a message from Sergeant Stanley R. Morgan, of the Army Signal Corps, stationed there, said today.

Seven deaths have already occurred among 300 cases of the epidemic the past ten days, and Dr. Henry W. Griest, the only physician, and his two graduate nurse helpers, have been combating the epidemic. A plane left Nome today to fly to Point Barrow with aid.

Mainland Post Sends Funds to England to Improve Last Resting Place of Capt. Vancouver—Acting Agent-General W. A. McAdam to Be Heard by Radio From Petersham Churchyard

COMMEMORATION services at the graveside of Captain George Vancouver, in Petersham churchyard, Richmond, England, will be broadcast on an Empire programme, May 18, according to information received by Native Sons of British Columbia. W. A. McAdam, acting Agent-General for British Columbia, and Rev. R. S. Mills will be the principal speakers at the ceremony. Funds to restore the appearance of the grave have been sent to England by Native Sons of British Columbia in Vancouver.

Twelve years ago the Vancouver Post of the Native Sons of British Columbia instituted an annual ceremony at the Petersham churchyard when seeds from British Columbia trees were planted there, to eventually shadow the last resting place of the great navigator who is remembered in the Island he circumnavigated and the third largest city in Canada. Annually since that time a wreath has been placed on the grave on the anniversary of Captain Vancouver's death. May 18, 1798, and each year the event had attracted more and more attention.

TO BE ADDRESSED

This year Mr. McAdam, who has been assiduous in his efforts to familiarize the British public with the reason for the colorful annual ceremony, has been asked to deliver the commemorative address.

Jubilee Originated As Family Affair And Party Growing

Original Idea of Church Service of Thanksgiving Grows Into Celebration in Which All Nations of the Empire Take Part

(Copyright, 1935, by The North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

LONDON, May 3.—This Silver Jubilee of the reign of King George V is a family affair. It was to have been a family affair, and it still will be, only the party has grown. The nation is coming to it. And London has dressed itself up to receive the people in silver and gold, in scarlet, green, yellow and royal blue.

This great, grimy, comfortable, higgledy-piggledy place, the friendliest and greatest city in all the world, has put vine leaves in its hair. Streams of silver and green hang down the walls of its shabby buildings; streams of yellow and blue festoon its crooked streets; flags, shields, rosettes, medallions are pinned to its lamp-posts just over the heads of the crowd, portraits of the King and Queen look down from intimate heights anywhere and everywhere in the mass of heterogeneous ugly brick and soot stone that is the heart of an empire.

NOT BY SYSTEM

There is no system, no design about these decorations, naturally enough, since there was no plan, since no order went out, since it was left to London to do exactly as it liked. And

Conducting Big Campaign to End Death Penalty

Wealthy London Widow Spending $20,000 a Week in Anti-Hanging Drive—Uses Airplanes and Loudspeaker Van and Army of Publicity Men to Attract Wide Attention

LONDON, May 4.—Mrs. Violet Van Der Elst, the London widow who does not believe in hanging murderers and who has started a campaign to abolish the death penalty in England, is spending $20,000 a week trying to alter this law.

A few months ago, no one had heard of this stocky, plump little woman, who is less than five feet high, and whose chief distinction consists of an enormous bank-roll. Today she has become news.

Her army of publicity men in her pay goes to this. Whenever a murderer is to be executed, Mrs. Van Der Elst is outside the prison gates, dressed in deep mourning. Cameras click as she steps from her great cream and black motor car. Hundreds go to see the show. Airplanes, with Van Der Elst pilots, burn Van Der Elst gasoline as they drive over the prison, streaming banners inscribed "Abolish the Death Penalty."

At her latest demonstration, when Percy Charles Anderson, twenty-one, was being hanged for shooting his sweetheart and throwing her in a tank, the police held up Mrs. Van Der Elst's procession of vans and sandwiches. Her chauffeur would not proceed in view of the police orders to stop. Mrs. Van Der Elst took the wheel. "They cannot stop me," she cried, and drove at speed to the prison. Police swarmed around the car. One was knocked down; but Mrs. Van Der Elst reached the prison gates. She was told that she would be summoned for dangerous driving and not having a license, and she said to the police: "Well, why don't you arrest me?"

But the police do not want to arrest Mrs. Van Der Elst. It would make a martyr of her.

READY TO SPEND MORE She already has spent thousands of pounds in her campaign. She has thousands more to spend. Her fur coats alone are worth thousands. Her Alaskan dogs are valued at $1,000 each. When she went to live at Addison Lodge, it took her three weeks to move her collection of Oriental antiques. She has toured the world collecting, and has a library of 5,000 books on witchcraft and black magic. She is an authority on these subjects.

Gambling is Mrs. Van Der Elst's hobby. "I have gambled at all the great casinos," she says. "I belong to the Monte Carlo Club."

Mrs. Van Der Elst says she is one of the loneliest women in the world. In the small hours of the morning she often summons her chauffeur to drive her along the Thames Embankment to distribute money to the poor. One of her financial interests is in shaving cream. She writes her own advertisements for fun.

Only recently she announced she would stand for Parliament at the next general election. Many people look upon this strange woman as a joke. Yet she makes the public talk and think, and while she can keep capital punishment in the limelight, Mrs. Van Der Elst does not mind being laughed at. Meanwhile, despite loudspeakers and hymns, airplanes and pamphlets, hanging by the neck remains the almost inevitable penalty in England for murder.

It's Not Election Time

No, it's not election time for Premier Mitchell Hepburn. The head of Ontario's Legislature took several members of his Cabinet on a personal tour to see how relief was being administered in Toronto suburbs. The Cabinet ministers found particular enjoyment in making friends with the kiddies. They also found that relief supplies are not adequate and promise to do something about it. Mr. Hepburn is shown here with an armful. All three seem to be enjoying the situation.

CLARENCE PAPPAS IS BURIED AT COLWOOD

The funeral of Clarence Pappas took place on Saturday afternoon. A large number of friends attended and the casket was banked with a profusion of beautiful flowers, testifying to the high esteem in which Mr. Pappas was held by his many friends.

Rev. A. Mandilakis, of the Greek Orthodox Church, of Vancouver, assisted by Rev. O. L. Jull, conducted the service, during which the hymn "O Sacred Christian Soldiers" was sung. "Sleep on, Beloved" was also sung as a solo by Mrs. H. Shingler.

Interment was made in Colwood Burial Park, with the following as pallbearers: Brothers D. A. Henry, J. C. Pullen and W. A. Noel, of Dominion Lodge, No. 4, T.O.P.F., and J. Drakos, N. Lerick and C. A. Lewis.

The Odd Fellows' burial service was conducted at the graveside by Noble Grand John Davies and Chaplain M. W. Mann, assisted by other officers of Dominion Lodge, No. 4.

Let there be no mistake about it, the King of England is no demagogue, dictator, or showman. He is simply the faithful servant and sovereign of the people and the hardest-worked man in the country.

They know this. They know him. It is strange how well they feel they know him.

He is quite a man, not impressive in appearance. He is no orator. He is silent, except on rare occasions. Only once has he spoken to the gaze of the nation.

That was on his last birthday. He spoke that day of the Empire as one great family, and he brought the hearts of the people and when they were told that he and the Queen and their family were going to St. Paul's, they remembered what he said and made known by unmistakable signs that, since they did indeed consider themselves members of his family, they intended to come to his family party.

AN EMPIRE INCLUDED Once this fact was known, there was no end to it. If the people of England were coming, the Dominions must be asked and the Princes of India. All the Empire must be included. No foreigners would be invited, but no family relations must be left out. And so the party grew by the will of the people.

But it remains a family affair; the biggest that ever has been held. I suppose, in the world, and I venture to say that the feeling that has brought it about is the simplest and most genuine that has animated any nation for many long days. For the feeling is quite simply the loyal devotion of a people to a King who they know is a friend.

Let there be no mistake about it.

To Forego Custom Of Beating Wives As Jubilee Pledge

LONDON, May 4.—AP.—Loyal subjects of King George, celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of his coronation, will find the men of the wild Satpura Hills type in faraway Burma doing their share. The tribesmen have taken a pledge to forego the age-old custom of beating their wives. Word received here was that the pledge has caused some head-shaking among the elders, who believed the women-folk, unaccustomed to such kindness, might get out of hand.

It has nothing in common with a political parade or a world's fair. It doesn't aim to be a great show. Nor are the 14,000 troops who will take part in the procession intended as a military display to rouse the people. No Hitlerism here; no gesture of power to the world. The men and women who will line the streets of London next Monday to acclaim King George V of England will remember August 4, 1914, and November 11, 1918, and the dark years of depression that came after.

They came through the war—the King was with them. They have struggled through its aftermath; the King was there. They stuck to him and he to them while Europe went through convulsions. While Russia, Germany and Austria have been shaken by revolutions, they and their King and the Throne of their King were steady.

Now, of their own huge effort, they have thrown off the depression. By virtue of an individual sacrifice on the part of every man and woman in the country, from the Lord Mayor of London to the unemployed miner in Wales who accepted a cut in his dole, they won in the long battle with adversity.

They have held fast to what they believe in—their Constitution, their Freedom and their King.

KNOW BY ALL The charwomen of London, the factory girls, the shop girls and crossing sweepers who will come out to see the King, wouldn't be likely to tell you all this next Monday, nor would the villagers who will light bonfires on every village green. But they will know what they know, and the King will know that they know.

BUFFALOES TO MEET The Pride of Victoria Lodge, Royal Antedivian Order of Buffaloes, will, on Thursday, celebrate the Silver Jubilee of King George V. All members of the order are urged to be present.

JUBILEE ORIGINATED AS FAMILY AFFAIR

every householder and shopkeeper has done exactly what he likes. He has gone his own sweet way about dressing up for this party.

And the result is curious. It is utterly English. It might have been hideous. But it isn't. The medley, the confusion, the riot of color are inconceivably gay. And it all conveys an unmistakable truth; namely that this celebration is a spontaneous impulse on the part of the people who have made their sovereign's anniversary their own affair and have taken the party off his hands.

THE FIRST IDEA It all began with the King saying that he would like to go to church on the morning of the twenty-fifth anniversary of his reign and attend a thanksgiving service. The original idea was that he should drive with his Queen and members of his immediate family to St. Paul's Cathedral. There was to have been no more to it than that. The King and Queen would drive through the streets on this silver anniversary of their reign and greet the people and give thanks to God.

But the people, when they got wind of this, took the matter into their own hands and began making their own plans. All over England, Scotland and Wales, in every town and village, they said: "Let us go to London to see the King and wish him well." They remembered that not long ago he had lain for weeks at death's door. They remembered all he had done for them. Little things one may call them, nothing spectacular.

SERVANT AND SOVEREIGN The King of England is no demagogue, dictator, or showman. He is simply the faithful servant and sovereign of the people and the hardest-worked man in the country.

They know this. They know him. It is strange how well they feel they know him.

FIND STORY IS REALITY

Travelers Report Merciless Treatment at Hands of Chinese Women Pirates

AMOI, China, May 4.—AP.—China's women pirates, seldom seen but famous in song and story along the South China coast, were a grim reality today to 300 terror-stricken Chinese travelers who arrived here aboard the coastal steamer Lokaiang.

According to the excited tales the travelers related they and the ship were in the hands of two female buccaniers and forty male subordinates from Tuesday until Friday.

The passengers said they and the ship were robbed of $250,000 Mexican in cash and silver bars, and that the pirates, after killing one passenger and wounding three, escaped in a small boat to a pirate stronghold north of here.

The steamer sailed Tuesday from an obscure port in South Fokchow Province for Amoy.

The victims said the female chief was a strange mixture of merciless outlaw and sentimental womanhood. Before escaping to shore in the small boats they gave a brother of the slain passenger $10 Mexican "to provide a funeral," and two Mexican dollars to each passenger "for transportation."

TILGUM SCHOOL HOLDS CONCERT Annual Event Includes Pageant Honoring King George V Silver Jubilee

Tilgum School held its annual Spring concert in aid of the choir and sports fund at Mount View High School on Friday evening. An interesting item on the programme was a play, "The Knife of Hearts," directed by Hugh A. Gaspell. The entertainment closed with a pageant commemorating the King's Silver Jubilee.

DEATH TAKES NOTED FLYER IN ALASKA

Frank Dorbandt, Famous for Daring on Mercy Flights, Dies at Fairbanks

PNEUMONIA SETS IN AFTER MINOR INJURY

FAIRBANKS, Alaska, May 4. (AP).—Frank Dorbandt, forty-one-year-old Alaska aviator, whose name had been written brightly in daring air adventures in the Far North, died today, a victim of a minor airplane accident. His wife, a bride of only a few months, was at the bedside.

His hand was badly, but not seriously cut three weeks ago by a whirling propeller at Takotna. He sustained a heavy loss of blood and pneumonia set in.

Brought to the Fairbanks Hospital here, he had been improving the past several days, until a sudden relapse occurred last night. He died at 1 o'clock this morning.

His death brought expressions of sorrow tonight from throughout the territory and from the United States, where fellow-Alaskans recalled his many daring exploits, as well as his numerous fits with the law in the past few years, and a "suicide hoax flight" several months ago.

In his "hoax flight," he said goodbye to his friends at Anchorage, said they wouldn't "see him again," and headed seaward in his plane over Cook Inlet. Two days later, however, he turned up inland, his dissatisfaction over his troubles with the law and finances apparently settled.

Dorbandt, who was born in Waco, Texas, fled seven years of Alaska flying with daring adventures. Friends also recalled that no Alaskan ever appealed to him for help and failed to receive it.

FAMOUS IN ALASKA
From his flight as the first aviator to reach the fur-trading Nanku when she was frozen in the ice at North Cape, Siberia, to his last exploit of only a few months ago, an attempted mid-Winter flight to the United States to bring Grant Reed, of Anchorage, here so that Reed might reach his sick wife's bedside in California, Dorbandt was famous throughout Alaska.

In the flight to take Reed South, in 40 and 50 below weather, he was forced down, lost, and finally his plane cracked up in British Columbia, but Reed was able to "get through" to Seattle. Reed and his wife, now recovered, are now awaiting return to the North.

Dorbandt piloted Father Bernard R. Hubbard, the "Glacier Priest," into the crater of the huge volcano Aniakchak and landed there, the first time such a flight was ever made. He made numerous rescue flights over the territory.

His troubles with the law included the illegal possession and transportation of furs, and conflicts with aviation officials over flight regulations. He was married three times.

W. A. McIndoe, of Mc-Cloy & Company, is dividing the honors in tomorrow's celebration between those of his King and his own. Mr. McIndoe celebrates his own birthday on Monday, as well as doing honor to the Silver Jubilee of His Majesty's accession to the throne.

While the local resident has never been a member of the regular forces of his country, he has never allowed the call for volunteers for active service to pass without enlisting, with the result that he has served three sovereigns in succession in the wars of the Empire.

As a volunteer in the 1st Regiment, Scottish Horse, Mr. McIndoe proceeded to South Africa and took part in the Boer War while Queen Victoria was on the throne. Later, while reading in South Africa, the Bambatha Zulu rebellion broke out.

THE KING'S JUBILEE

Tomorrow an Empire celebrates the Silver Anniversary of the accession to the Throne of one of that Empire's best-loved Kings. His Majesty occupies his place in the hearts of his people because he is a man as well as a monarch. His whole career has been one long story of faithful efforts to breathe into the spirit of royalty the ideal of service. Royalty to him has meant personal loyalty to those over whom he rules. Because of this conception of kindly duties, and the manner in which he has continuously exemplified it, there is no loyal heart within the vast Imperial domain that will not be stirred tomorrow by the knowledge that the Silver Jubilee anniversary is a momentous epoch in one of the greatest of reigns in British annals.

Tomorrow's celebrations are a reminder, to even the most forgetful, of the debt of Empire to the Royal House and of the great antiquity of that House. It is no exaggeration to say that never in all its long history has the dynasty of the British people been more firmly established. There is no instance in the long line of sovereigns, compared with the equipment of the King where one who held the sceptre had acquired a larger experience of men and affairs. It can with every truth be recorded of King George that his character and abilities are in every sense king-like and no one of his predecessors on the Throne ever expressed with equal force the potentialities and aspirations of Empire. None, in fact, has ever studied them at closer quarters or with more sympathetic understanding. His Majesty's knowledge of the Empire he rules is among his greatest assets as a King.

If there are any characteristics which, above all others, stand out in the personality of His Majesty they are love of country and love of home. He is dominated always by the desire to promote the welfare and happiness of his people. He has visited many parts of the Empire and as a result of his travels he entertains profound convictions derived from experience. One of these convictions is that his own Homeland should recognize the immense Imperial responsibilities that are hers, and he recorded this in a memorable message, the burden of the theme of which was "Wake up England." In this respect he put the coping stone on the structure of which the foundations were laid by Mr. Joseph Chamberlain when that statesman urged the people of Great Britain to "think Imperially." His Majesty has proved himself the Royal Empire-Builders who has consolidated, as no British monarch has ever done before, the spirit of Imperial patriotism.

The King has far more than the average of kingly attributes. He is a great traveler and eloquent speaker. Trained as a sailor, the Royal Navy was his chosen and favorite profession. He entered that service in 1877, serving first in the Mediterranean and then in the West Indies, South Africa, China, Japan, South America, Egypt, Palestine and Greece. As a midshipman he visited Newfoundland and this Dominion Under the White Ensign he was always treated like the rest of his comrades, and won his promotion by merit to the command of the gunboat Thrush on the North Atlantic and West Indian station. Before he left the career of the sea he had attained the rank of commander, and he only severed his active connection with the Royal Navy on the death of his elder brother, the Duke of Clarence, in 1892, at which time he changed the current of his life through his becoming hereditary presumptive to the Throne.

Standing second in the line of succession, he entered a sphere of duties to which he was entirely unaccustomed, but his training was such that he discharged these with the greatest tact. He was aided by the perfect understanding which existed between himself and his father, the Duke of York, who had been a devoted and devoted son of sympathy that insured harmony and devotion in their public and private relationships. In 1893 he married Princess Victoria Mary, the only daughter of Princess Mary of Cambridge and the late Duke of Teck, who had previously been betrothed to the Duke of Clarence. The marriage was one of genuine affection, an affection which has remained unclouded throughout forty-two years. The marriage increased in His Majesty the family instinct, strengthened his love of home, built up new domestic ties and served still further to develop those amiable traits of character which have contributed to endearing the King to the people among whom he has lived and inured at his royal tasks.

With the death of Queen Victoria in 1901, the Duke of York, as King George then was, came one step nearer to the Throne and his responsibilities increased proportionately. Prior to Her Majesty's death the Duke of York had been commissioned to open the first Parliament of the Australian Commonwealth, a duty in part designed as a proof of royal interest and gratitude for the role played by troops of the Overseas Dominions in the South African War. The Duke of York's tour in the Opium, during which he visited all the States of Australia, New Zealand, Natal, Cape Colony and Canada, is a matter of historical record. It was an Imperial Odyssey which broadened the mind of one who was fashioning himself to enter the roll of Great Britain's most august kings. On his return to England he was invested as Prince of Wales.

The place which King George occupies after a quarter of a century of his reign is inscribed in living letters on the pages of current history. During the terrible years of the Great War he was a tower of strength and inspiration to his people. In the Navy he had accepted the motto that, "England expects every man to do his duty," and he brought that conception of patriotic obligation to the Throne. Nothing, indeed, has ever turned him from the path of duty. Interested always in measures for social betterment he has paid many visits to all classes of the people and done much to lighten the burden of misery of the poorer of his subjects. He is known to have little love for ceremonial and to prefer privacy and simple pursuits, but his personal predilections have been submerged by the knowledge that the office he holds demands much sacrifice, and so he has always willingly undertaken all those onerous duties which fall to the lot of the King. In his home life he has two hobbies—the collection of stamps, of which he has many rare specimens, and the collection of printed matter relating to his children. His love of sport is one of his many characteristics which have so endeared him to a sporting nation. He has emulated that great sportsman, his father, by starting a racing stable, and he is widely known as one of the best shots in Great Britain.

King George will always be numbered among those who have rendered true and faithful service to mankind. No monarch in Great Britain's royal roll call has ever so potently expressed the hopes and aspirations of his people, has so carefully lived up to the best traditions of the Royal House, has so nobly the privileges and duties of kingship. Throughout his life, even before he came to the Throne, he never chose the easy road, but, instead, the one that was hard to tread. There has always been for him a mentor in royalty; noblesse oblige has ever been the high duty as well as the high prerogative. Such a monarch occupies a foremost place on the stage of human events. He does so because he is a Christian, a gentleman, a devoted father and husband, an administrator, a diplomat, a statesman, an Empire-builder, a patriot and the sovereign of the greatest of Empires the world has ever known. His Majesty is honored everywhere on the occasion of his Silver Jubilee because he has brought to the task of kingship commanding abilities and rich human qualities. Of him, more perhaps than of any of his predecessors on the greatest of Christendom's thrones, the words of Sir John Denham may be quoted:

Happy when both to the same centre move,
When kings give liberty and subjects love.

WITHOUT A PRAYER

The deepest note to be struck by the King's Jubilee celebrations in the heart of the Empire is the Thanksgiving Service at St. Paul's Cathedral. The first personal wish of His Majesty in connection with the anniversary of the twenty-fifth year of his accession to the Throne was that a public opportunity should be made available to raise a song of prayer and praise to the Almighty on behalf of the Royal Family by the representatives of the Empire now assembled in London, as well as the people generally. That is and should be the keynote of the Jubilee—recognition of the omnipotent place occupied by the Eternal in the shaping of human destiny.

Either through stupidity or by a most regrettable oversight on the part of the authorities at Ottawa, no place for a prayer of thanksgiving has been allowed on the programme of celebration here tomorrow. It is an omission that should be rectified. As a matter of fact, what Ottawa should have had anything at all to say in the arrangement for local celebrations is not understandable. All over the United Kingdom what is done locally is a matter for the local authorities. Ottawa has been guilty of a solecism in omitting a prayer of thanksgiving in the Jubilee celebrations as arranged for the actual anniversary of the accession.

The trust of every Christian in the community is that, even at this eleventh hour, provision will be made for the offering up of a prayer by the multitude that assembles on the Parliament Buildings lawn tomorrow. His Majesty is a Christian in thought, in word and in deed. He would not have this celebration of his Jubilee without full recognition being given to the King of kings.

"KING GEORGE THE FAITHFUL"

To be read on the Canadian Radio Commission's Jubilee broadcast between 8 and 9:30 a.m. on May 6. God gave us such a king as men desired. In Israel's day and found not; high, set high above the little reach of mortal men. Loyal in soul and deed, yet very kind. To us, who have trodden step by step through the valley of the shadow of death, less dim because he walked with us to the gates. Of the golden City of God we will follow him.

—Audrey Alexandra Brown.

Pantheism is the child of false zeal and of superstition, the father of intolerance and of persecution. —J. W. Fletcher.

Beneath the rule of men entirely great The pen is mightier than the sword. —Bulwer-Lytton.

Calamity turns to our advantage and great ruins make way for greater glory.—Seneca.

Note and Comment

F. R. &amp; D.

The aggregate happiness of society, which is the proper end of the practice of a virtuous policy, is, of course, to be the end of all government.—Washington.

It may have been Dr. Johnson, or it may have been someone else, who said something might be made of a scold if you caught him in time. It may have been a poet, or it may have been more than one poet who said a good word for the devil himself. We admit having said some things about Mayor McGee, things not particularly complimentary, but we also said the case of Gerry was not so serious that something might not be made of him. We have never denied that Gerry was possessed of ability, generally misapplied and mostly misdirected, at the same time pointing out that the reddest radical often became the bluest Conservative when he attained years of discretion and his powers of reason and logic became fully developed. So the time has come to give the Mayor of Vancouver a pat on the back.

Speaking as Mayor of Vancouver, Mr. McGee administered a rebuke to the head of one of the big business houses of the East for some of the statements he made through the columns of the newspaper about the Ottawa investigation into price spreads and the meddling of politicians in business. The price spreads inquiry clearly proved that there had been abuses in business, and particularly in business in the bigger classifications. The representative of the business in question declared that if the politicians did not keep their meddling hands off business the result would be increases in taxation and increases in the cost of all kinds of goods to consumers.

That is what representatives of many businesses in both Canada and the United States are saying at the present time, and there may be something in what they are saying if governments go too far in attempts to adjust the relations between the producer and the consumer and employer and employee. But there is another side to the question, and that side is the matter of profits in certain businesses, and whether managers of the larger concerns could not get along without exacting exorbitant profits on the goods they handle, not as primary producers, but as middlemen or commission agents.

There are numerous critics who say the Government of the United States has gone too far in its attempts to regulate business, what with bonusing producers to cease production and fixing prices, limiting hours of work and regulating wages, and voting billions of dollars of borrowed money to be spent in the hope of stimulating business and causing the wheels of industry to turn faster. But if there has been a sort of political priggie in the United States, and there is sure to be a reaction when the time comes for the people to pay the piper with increased taxation, there is no indication that in Canada we have "lost our heads" and are likely to rush to such extremes.

The effort of the Mayor of Vancouver to the Eastern side of business reform proves that he is not devoting all his time to making foolish speeches on economic and political questions; that he is reading the papers and noting what is simmering in the minds of other people. If that is true of Mr. McGee, we may assume it is true of the men in charge of the affairs of Canada. The world moves, and everything in the world must move with it. There is no such condition as perfection in men, and man-made institutions partake of the nature of men. They are not perfect, and the defects in them must be corrected in accordance with the conclusions which result from observation and experience.

The ultimate object of all government is the greatest good to the greatest number. If the accomplishments of governments are to be weighed in the balance of that somewhat frayed and tattered epigram, most governments have come far short of the purposes for which they were established. A prelate of the church said the other day in an address to the clergy, the laity, and to us all that another civilization is in process of dissolution and a new civilization in production. That statement is strictly true, although its meaning is obvious. What is happening is the end of an old era and the beginning of a new dispensation. There is going to be a change in methods of conducting the business of the nations. It is the business of governments to direct and control the new movement; and so regulate it that it shall not culminate in a revolution. Business is constitutionally conservative. It says the old order has proved its qualities and should not be altered, because reforms inevitably run to extremes and end in confusion. The reformation in business and in Statutory repudiation of a definite part of the pledges inscribed on some municipal bonds in British Columbia has brought into dispute the old-time assurance, "His word is as good as his bond." The time may arrive, indeed, when such a recommendation should be considered libelous.—S.G.

Tut, Tut, Our Duff's an Angel!

There is a lesson that every public man should learn, namely, to control his features no matter what he may be anticipating from the speaker who follows him on the public platform. Premier T. D. Pattullo took a passing "shot" at hospitals at the Jubilee graduation ceremony. He said the public apparently regarded hospitals as a splendid place to spend a vacation. Mayor David Loevinger followed, and said that "fools rushed in where angels feared to tread." A red glow began to rise from below the Premier's chin, and he spread over his features. His face, however, broke into a broad smile, but his significant pause hinted the ally and suggested that he himself was the fool, and began to deliver a message, which he thought might have justified the remark.—P.C.R.

A Search in Time Values

There is no end to which the Royal Canadian Mounted Police will go to prevent a crime. An instance illustrating this occurred here when fireworks for the Jubilee celebration were impounded from Seattle. In order to guard against any disaster such as occurred in connection with the Preparedness Day parade in San Francisco, for which money and Billings are serving the terms of the R.C.M.P. searched every package of fireworks to see if any bombs were concealed in them.—P.C.R.

Well, She's Lucky!

Businessmen canvassers in the $40,000 Tourist Trade Development Association drive were swapping notes Friday evening. Some told heart-breaking stories of rebuffs; others reported optimistic contacts. But the prize morsel of all came from one of the younger businessmen. He told how he described aims and objects of the association to a prominent businesswoman and how more visitors to the city would increase her trade. This was her startling answer: "I have enough business now to get along quite nicely; I don't care if my business increases or not."—G.B.

NORTHWEST REBELLION

Re "Reminiscences of Northwest Rebellion, 1885." In my article on this important event in Canadian history, which you were good enough to publish in your last Sunday's issue, I noticed several errors which no doubt were due to my inadequate knowledge of the copy. For instance, the letter states that 400 men were brought from the East, whereas the number should have been 4000. The addresses of the two surviving sons of Dr. P. W. Royston should be Victoria instead of Duncan. I would like to add that there is also a daughter, Mrs. P. T. Skrimshire, living at Shawanigan Lake, and another son, Mr. J. M. Royston, well-known engineer, also in British Columbia.

Damaged by Fire

Fire did extensive damage to the roof and upper story of Andrew Greer's home at 85 Carrie Street, yesterday afternoon. The loss was covered by insurance. Fire Marshal H. W. V. Pecknold said last night. For an hour and a half the Esquimalt fire department battled the fire. Most of the furniture on the upper floor was carried to safety by neighbors who offered their assistance.

Several roofs of homes nearby were carried away by a southeast wind. These and the flames were quickly extinguished by residents, however.

Fire Marshal Pecknold said he believed the fire was due to a dirty chimney.

Arrangements have been completed by the Cowichan Indian Thunderbird Club for their annual regatta, to be held at Cowichan Bay, next Sunday, May 12. This will be the most spectacular event of its kind held in the province for many years. The feature of a splendid programme for which Indian sportsmen have been training for weeks will be the war canoe race. No less than fifteen eleven-paddle canoes will take part in this contest. That means that there will be 165 expert canoe men engaged in the classic. There will also be other canoe races, water sports and native competitions that should attract a large crowd.

VICTORIA WILL JOIN EMPIRE OBSERVANCE

where Rev. C. R. Quimby, Dean of Columbia, will speak. At 3 p.m. an open-air service of thanksgiving will be held on top of Mount Tolmie, where Rev. Dr. Glen Davies will speak.

BRILLIANT CEREMONY
One of the most brilliant and colorful ceremonies to be seen in the city for many years will take place at 11 a.m. Monday in front of the Legislative Buildings, where the official Provincial observance of Empire Day will be held in a setting bright with uniforms and gay with bands and flags.

From every standpoint, it will be a public ceremony, and the public is particularly requested to give the advantage of position to children and to join in all the hymns. Official programmes will be distributed free and amplifiers will carry the programme to the remotest limits of the throng expected to gather for the ceremony.

All units and others taking part in the proceedings are asked to be in their places by 10:45 a.m., when a fifteen-minute band concert will follow.

PARADE ORDER

His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor and Provincial officials will occupy a dais in front of the main steps of the Legislative Buildings. Flanking the dais on one side will be Victoria and district recipients of the King's Service Medal. Flanking the dais on the other side will be the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry. At the rear of the dais will be the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the 5th Brigade, C.A., and the Royal Canadian Engineers on the west front.

On the east driveway, from the war memorial to the museum, will be war veterans, accompanied by their own band and the band of the 5th Coast Brigade, C.A. On the west driveway will be detachments from the Canadian Engineers, the Canadian Corps of Signals, the Canadian Scottish Regiment, the Canadian Machine Gun Corps, the Royal Canadian Army Service Corps, the Canadian Army Medical Corps, the Canadian Army Ordnance Corps.

MASSED BANDS
Massey bands of the Canadian Scottish and other regiments will occupy a position immediately below the central part of the main terrace in front of the steps. To their west will be Cadets, Sea Cadets, Boy Scouts and Wolf Clubs. To their east will be school choirs, Girl Guides and Brownies. Standard-bearers of the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire will be ranged around the south side of the fountain, facing the dais.

This arrangement will leave the major part of both main lawns open to the public, a space capable of holding more than 10,000 persons. The saluting battery of the 5th Field Battery, C.A., will be lined up on Belleville Street, facing the Buildings, from which point it will participate in the royal salute of twenty-one guns and the feu-de-joie. The feu-de-joie will be a colorful, beautiful, and impressive display of rifle fire with blanks interspersed with a few bars of the National Anthem, the whole repeated three times.

OFFICIAL PROGRAMME

The order for the programme includes the royal salute, the feu-de-joie, "God Save the King" by massed bands, official addresses by His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor, Premier Pattullo, Rev. Robert Connolly, as Leader of the Opposition, and His Worship Mayor David Leeming. "Land of Hope and Glory" by massed bands, presentation of maintains it was one hundred feet long, about six feet in circumference, and "lapped" toward bow and stern. The head, he said, was twice the size of that of a large sea lion. It was dull grey in color with stripes near the head and the head itself very much darker than the body and tail.

UCLUELET FISHERMAN REPORTS SEA SERPENT

While the fisherman was lying in order to investigate this strange creature more thoroughly, to his surprise it suddenly arched its back and raised its head, just as a snake would do. This movement was conviction enough that it was none of the regular sea animals he had ever known. When asked how high it raised its head, he replied that as far as he could estimate it was at least twenty feet, perhaps more than that. When he finally left the spot of the strange encounter, he said that he noticed that the creature was swimming but not travelling very fast, although he did not doubt that it was capable of great speed if necessary.

MAN OF EXPERIENCE

There is perhaps no one on the West Coast better versed on the things of the sea than Mr. Taylor. He was born in Newfoundland and, after many years spent on the Atlantic fishing banks, he came to Vancouver Island, and has resided here for some years. ## MADAME FLANDIN IS ALSO BADLY HURT

AUXERRE, France, May 4 (AP).—Premier Pierre-Etienne Flandin of France and Madame Flandin were severely injured near here today when his automobile collided with another car.

Flandin suffered a broken arm and nervous shock, but the damage at the hospital where he was taken said no complications were feared.

Madame Flandin was injured on the head and leg and lacerated. When the recovered consciousness she complained of pains in the side, indicating the possibility that some of her ribs were broken.

The Premier was en route to his home at D'Assy, near Cognac, to vote in tomorrow's municipal elections. Eyewitnesses said his car was speeding at a rate of eighty miles an hour. The machine collided with that of Deputy Jean Bonafant, of Auxerre. The deputy was not in the car, but his chauffeur was bruised, as was Flandin's son-in-law, M. Breguet. Flandin's daughter, Lisa, was not hurt.

Pioneer Miner, Residing Here, Nearly Century Old

Alfred George Loranee First Visited Victoria in 1876 Before Voyaging to Yukon in 1880.
—Knew Many Famous Characters

Many of the old soundboughs of the Yukon and Klondike are today living in obscurity, or have long since passed on to a land where there are no gold pans, beans and bacon, or hungry wolves howling in the northern night.

One of the few remaining hardy pioneers, who braved untold hardships in a search for the precious yellow metal, today celebrates his ninety-eighth birthday. He is Alfred George Loranee, 2466 Epworth Street, first cousin of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Mr. Loranee, in spite of his nearness to the century mark, still has good eyesight and takes great pleasure in recalling the old mining days when men drew their guns, or fought it out with fists instead of arguing.

Born on a farm thirty-five miles from Montreal in 1837, Mr. Loranee went to work in logging camps of Eastern Canada with the hardy French-Canadians, when only thirteen years old. Long before he attained his majority he was timber cruising and surveying around Lake Michigan.

HERE IN 1867
Lured by tales of gold in California creeks and rivers, he left the Canadian wilds and made his way to the Pacific Coast. He spent some time prospecting in the foothills before deciding to try his luck on Vancouver Island, which has been the scene of several minor gold rushes at Leechtown, Sooke, Port Renfrew and Goldstream. Mr. Loranee arrived in Victoria in 1867, sixty-eight years ago. The city then was only twenty-four years old, and he remembers it as a thriving community.

Borne on by the miner's urge to seek strange ground and stake a claim, Mr. Loranee departed again for California, making his headquarters at Weaverville. From there he sailed to the Columbia River to prospect its tributaries and sandbars.

Finally the lure of the North took him to the Yukon, which had been attracting miners since 1876. He arrived there in 1880, but soon returned to California. In 1896 he visited the Yukon again. Journeying up the Yukon River, he met George W. Carmack at the junction of the Tron Deg, who was fishing for salmon to sell to the miners. His assistants were Skookum Jim and Tagish Charlie, two Indians.

CLAIMS STAKED
"Carmack heard of gold at Bonanza Creek, so he and the Indians soon staked claims," said Mr. Loranee, in recalling his acquaintance with the well-known Yukoner. "Not long after, all claims around Bonanza and Eldorado Creeks were staked. Thousands left for the Klondike to climb the Chilkoot Pass and journey down the Yukon River to Dawson. By 1899 practically all the creeks of any importance had been staked in the Klondike," he recalled.

If recollections of a friend of his, Charles Anderson, bought an Eldorado claim for $650, and later took out $75,000. Before leaving the goldfields in 1903, Mr. Loranee spent some time on the Pelly and Fortymile Rivers, where, upon many occasions, he was reduced to a diet of fish and flour when supplies failed to arrive.

For fifteen years after his northern experiences, he worked at Ansox. In 1920, when ninety-three years old, he decided that it was time to retire.

Asked his recipe for attaining a healthy old age of ninety-eight, Mr. Loranee said: "I have worked hard all my life. I have been active and always interested in things surrounding me. I have slept on the ground more than in beds, and always enjoyed eating simple food."

SHIP STRIKE AT MONTREAL ENDS

Longshoremen Return to Work When Employers Meet Their Demands

MONTREAL, May 4 (CP).—Hours of negotiation resulted today in settlement of the longshoremen's strike which, for several days, has crippled shipping at Montreal. The companies acceded to the longshoremen's demands. Announcement was first made to Hon. W. A. Gordon, Minister of Labor.

The 2,000 longshoremen who walked off the job Wednesday and effectively tied up ocean shipping movements in the port obeyed the 1 p.m. starting whistle today and went back to work.

Crews of the twenty-nine freighters and one passenger liner held idle because of the tie-up, prepared once more to get their vessels out onto the open sea again.

The longshoremen who walked out gained a complete victory. The Department of Labor at Ottawa was informed all the men's demands were granted by the ship owners at a final conference at noon today after several previous offers had been rejected by the men.

There were no disorders at any time during the walkout.

Declaring their innings after ten wickets had fallen, University School Incos registered a 133-15 victory over the University School yesterday afternoon in a friendly cricket match played on the University School grounds. ## Attendant At Tea Is Coat Thief

CHICAGO, May 4 (AP). — The women who attended a Friday tea at the fashionable Grace Lutheran Church parish house in suburban River Forest would like to know more about the charming gentleman who greeted them upon their arrival — and so would the police.

As each woman reached the parish house to sip tea, the affable stranger told her where she could hang her wraps, and he was good enough to help each off with her coat.

"A nice mink coat you have," said he as he helped Mrs. Charles Holtenback take it off.

"Yes," she agreed. "I guess you couldn't duplicate it for $1,500 right now."

When the party broke up, the coats were gone. So was the charming gentleman. The police received reports about the coats, including the one that Mrs. Holtenback took to have.

SAYS EXCITEMENT HIGH IN ENGLAND

G. H. Leith, Douglas Lake, Reports Great Britain Marching Out of Depression

All England is pulsing with patriotic fervor in preparation for the Royal Jubilee celebrations, according to G. H. Leith, of the Douglas Lake Cattle Company, who reached Victoria on the Dutch passenger freighter Drechtstyk, yesterday.

Mr. Leith, while in the Old Country, traveled all over England and Scotland and found the countries were steadily working out of the economic depression. He found the industrial and business improvement was marked and the people were more optimistic.

On his return trip to Victoria, Mr. Leith traveled in company with Colonel Johnstone, recently of the Indian army, and an internationally-known sportsman, big game hunter and polo player. On arrival, both travelers were noticeably bronzed by sea breezes and tropic suns, as the voyage was made from England via the Panama Canal.

Mr. Leith is an authority on wild bird life in British Columbia and has a bird sanctuary at Douglas Lake, where he spends long hours in his favorite study.

Here's Health Unto His Majesty

Down twelve reigns, the sentiment of this song of the Court of King Charles II reflects the loyal feelings of the present day. Service, steady, ungrudging, unselfish service, no other force can make this sentiment in the hearts of men.

For what can force loyalty? Wealth cannot purchase it, nor rule compel nor the power of privilege oblige more than obedience. Save only service, recognition of steady, ungrudging, unselfish service, no other force can make this sentiment in the hearts of men.

From the "I Serve" of his younger days, throughout the testing times and triumphs of his reign, His Majesty King George V has been an example of service to the best interests of his people.

JACKIE COOGAN HURT SLIGHTLY IN ACCIDENT

New York city: Dr. H. O. Westphal, of Glendale, and A. L. Burnstein, Jackie Coogan's manager.

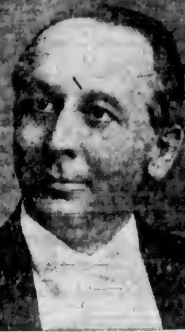

The party was met at Lindbergh Field by state motorcycle police, who escorted them to the Coogan ranch. Of the group only three—Lentz, Dr. Westphal and Burnstein—knew of John Coogan's tragic death.

FATHER DRIVING CAR. Jackie Coogan tonight reported his father was driving the car when it was forced from the highway by an approaching vehicle.

From his bed in the grocery store, young Coogan said: "My father was forced to drive his car onto the shoulder of the road. The next thing I remember is that the auto had left the road and we were going off an embankment. The car went end-over-end and was spinning at the same time. I was knocked down in the seat, but pulled myself up quickly and leaped out."

While the young star related his story of the tragedy, a priest, identified as Father, was later brought into San Diego by an ambulance and taken to the El Cortez Hospital.

Two sons predeceased him, Garnet in South Africa in 1904 and Sgt. Joseph W. Odlum, killed in the Second Battle of Ypres in 1915.

BORN IN UPPER CANADA. Professor Odlum was born in Tullamore, Gore Township, Peel County, Ont. (then Upper Canada) November 27, 1850. He had been a resident of Vancouver since 1889. For the two years prior to coming here he was principal of the Toyo-Ewa Gakko, a college of the Methodist Church of Canada in Tokyo, Japan.

During his Japanese stay he made a scientific examination of Mount Bandai after its eruption when sixty villages were buried. He gave his findings to the Imperial Japanese University in a lecture, which was published for distribution by the Japanese Government.

After coming to Vancouver he became interested in real estate and in the following years was associated as shareholder or director with a large number of financial concerns. He retained his business activities up to the time of his illness.

WROTE EXTENSIVELY. He wrote extensively for newspapers in Vancouver and published numerous pamphlets and some larger works.

He was a teacher during his career of Greek, Latin and science. He was a life-long student of botany, chemistry, geology, astronomy, ancient history, philology, Hebrew, Chaldean, Egyptian hieroglyphics, and above all, the Bible.

Though frequently a preacher in Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist and Anglican churches, he was never ordained as a clergyman. He was the founder of the British-Israel Society in British Columbia.

Professor Odlum was of Irish descent from both sides of his parentage, though his father, JAMES A. ODLUM, came to Canada as a boy with his father, Captain Abraham Odlum, a Waterloo veteran from Peasport, Guernsey. His mother was Margaret McKenzie from near Gungahon, Northern Ireland.

ATTENDED UNIVERSITY. The young ODLUM fitted into a "cabin-maker" in the shop of Isaac Wilson near his Ontario home. He was educated in the Coburn-Emile Institute and Victoria University, then at Coburn, taking the degree of B.A. M.A. and B.Sc.

He taught in Coburn College and lectured in Victoria University. He made canoe trips through the then relatively unknown regions of Northern Ontario towards James Bay by way of Temiskaming and Abitibi Rivers. He was then connected with the Ontario Field Naturalists' Society and the British Association for the Advancement of Science and addressed the latter organization at Montreal and Liverpool. He took an active part with Professor Eugene Haug in the building of Paradis Hall at Victoria University.

PREMIER WILL OPEN CIRCUS

Annual Y.M.C.A. Event to Be Held Next Friday and Saturday at Willows

Premier T. D. Pattullo will open the annual Y.M.C.A. Circus next Friday evening at 8:15 o'clock. A great show has been arranged at the Willows by the programme committee, under the chairmanship of W. W. Martin. The show will be repeated on Saturday night.

Among the "offside" features are the Elvira Band, the Britannia Branch (Canadian Legion) Band, the Y.M.C.A. Clown Band, the Victoria Fire Department, the Royal Canadian Navy, the Victoria Riding Academy and Polo Club, and the Russian Ballet School of Dance.

The show will open with the big circus parade, including the entire cast of artists, clowns and animals. This will be followed by a very intricate and colorful wand drill. The animals will then perform to the whip and command of Harold MacLean. The Toonerville Fire Department will offer a burlesque. Thrills with rescue and life-line jumps are planned. The firemen are busy rehearsing and are full of enthusiasm.

The tumbling team has learned a complete routine of tricks that are entirely new and intricate. The drill team from the Canadian Navy promises the fans a real treat.

The Senior Leader Corps has a new number and are performing on two sets of parallel bars. Their movements are synchronized so that every movement is started at the far end of the bars and is completed when each couple lands simultaneously from the inside end of the bars.

The Victoria Riding Academy event will be thrilling. Sir Wilfred, noted jumper, runs around the ring without a rider and clears a table with a man lying on top of it. At the snap of Bert Carley's whip, the animal reverses, pivots, and clears another horse lying on the ground. The Intermediate School will make the ladder pyramids as high as the average building, and the speed at which they build them is amazing.

The Junior Leaders will be seen in fast team work on the gymnasium elephant and spring board, performing single, double and triple tricks with ease. Another event which could easily make headlines on a big circus is the "devil jump," performed by Ian Ross on a horse named Bell. He runs around the darkened arena when a veritable wall of flame roars up in the centre of the arena, and the horse runs at it and jumps directly through the centre of it.

GOLD MODELING. Gold modeling will close the bill this year with many new poses, including the blacksmith, the rovers, the laborers, and several individual poses. Immediately following the posing there will be a short potpourri of gymnastics, dancing, tumbling and nonsense, ending up with a surprise tableaux.

A reserved seating plan is on hand at the Y.M.C.A. and anyone buying seats is requested to bring them in so that they can be marked.

REVIVED DRIVE TO BE STARTED

Friendly Help Welfare Association Will Appeal for $18,000 Fund

During October and November, 1934, a campaign was held, having as its objective the raising of $43,500 for the combined needs of the Friendly Help Welfare Association of Victoria, Esquimalt Friendly Help, Saanich Welfare Association, and Oak Bay Friendly Help.

It was the wish of the campaign committee that an attempt be made to raise this sum without resorting to a personal canvass, and to that end both local newspapers threw open their columns to the necessary publicity.

6,000 LETTERS OF APPEAL

In addition to the publicity given by the Victoria papers, nearly 6,000 letters of appeal were sent out from campaign headquarters. The result of this campaign was that slightly over $25,000 was contributed by 900 donors, giving a remarkably high average subscription.

The amount raised, however, does not suffice to meet the needs of the several associations, and it is imperative, if the splendid work done by them is to continue, that $18,000 additional funds be raised immediately to finance the work to the end of 1935.

CANVASS TO BE MADE

To this end, a canvass will shortly be inaugurated having the raising of this additional sum as its objective. The campaign committee wish it to be clearly understood that it is not their desire that those who have already so splendidly supported the work by their donations should be approached again, and the canvassers who will visit the next few days will visit houses and pieces of business in the Greater Victoria area, will be so instructed.

It is hoped, however, that many of those to whom the canvassers will be approached, and who at that time did not contribute, will

Even Rheumatic Pains Eased Fast Now!

BAD HEADACHES, NEURITIS PAINS OFTEN RELIEVED IN MINUTES THIS WAY

Remember the pictures below when you want fast relief from pain. Demand and get the method doctors prescribe—Aspirin.

Millions have found that Aspirin eases even a bad headache, neuritis or rheumatic pain often in a few minutes!

In the stomach, as in the glass here, an Aspirin tablet starts to dissolve, or disintegrate, almost the instant it touches moisture. It begins "taking hold" of your pain

Why Aspirin Works So Fast

Drop an Aspirin tablet in a glass of water. Note that BEFORE it touches moisture, it is disintegrating.

What happens in these glasses? Aspirin starts to dissolve, or disintegrate, almost the instant it touches moisture. It begins "taking hold" of your pain

ROBERT W. CHAMBERS

CHAPTER I

On the 1st of May, 1774, the anchor lee, which for so many months had silver-plated the river bed, was tipped off and dashed into a million gushing flakes by the amber outrush of the Springtime flood.

On that day I had laid my plans for halting the warm showa where the small fry attract the great leech which have lain benumbed all winter under their crystal roof of ice.

So certain was I of a holiday undisturbed by schoolroom tasks that I whistled boldly as I sat on my cot bed, sorting hooks. It was, therefore, with misgiving that I heard Peter and Esk stamp down to the schoolroom, dragging their horn-books along the balustrade.

Now we had had no tasks set us for three weeks, for our schoolmaster, Mr. Yost, journeying to visit his mother in Pennsylvania, had been shot and scalped at Easteridge near Fort Pitt—probably by some drunken Delaware.

My kinsman and guardian, Sir William Johnson, who, as all know, was Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the Crown, had but recently returned from the upper castle with his secretary, Captain Walter Butler; and, preoccupied with the lamentable murder of Mr. Yost, had found no time to concern himself with our affairs.

Hearing Esk and fat Peter on their way to the schoolroom, I took alarm, believing that our new schoolmaster had arrived. I seized my fish rod and started to slip out of the house. I was seen in the hallway, however, by Captain Butler, Sir William's secretary, and ordered to report to him at the schoolroom.

I paid no heed to Mr. Butler, but walked defiantly downstairs, although he called me twice in his cold, menacing voice. And I should have continued triumphantly out of the door had not I met Silver Heels dancing through the lower hallway her slate and pencil under her arm.

"Oh, Michael," she cried, "Captain Butler has consented to instruct us until the new schoolmaster comes from Albany."

"Oh, has he?" I sneered. "What do I care for Mr. Butler? I'm going out!"

"No, you're not!" replied Silver Heels. "Sir William says you are to take your ragged old book of gods and nymphs and be diligent."

"Who told you that?"

"Aunt Molly sent me to seek you. So now who's going fishing, my lord?"

"If I go," said I, "I won't study my books, anyway. You will see!"

Sir William's favorite ferret, Vix, with murmur on, came sneaking along the wall, and I grasped the little animal and thrust it at Silver Heels, whereupon she kicked my legs with her, moccasins, which did not hurt, and ran upstairs like a wildcat.

There was nothing for me but to go to the schoolroom. I laid my red in the corner, pocketed the ferret, and went slowly up the stairs.

At eighteen I was a willful dunce. Destined against my will, for Dartmouth College by my guardian, who very well understood that I desired to be a soldier, I had resolutely set myself against every schoolroom accomplishment.

Yet Sir William, undaunted and bent on making me a man of learning, continued to hold me on the school bench.

"Master Cardigan," said Mr. Butler when I entered the room, "Sir William desires you to prepare a recitation upon the story of Prosperine."

I muttered rebelliously but jerked my mythology from a pile of books and began to thumb the leaves noisily. Presently Sir William entered and saw the ferret.

"Put that ferret out the window!" he commanded.

"The ferret is your best one—Vix!" I answered. "She will run to the Warren and we shall have to dig her out."

"Pocket her, then," said Sir William, hastily. "Who gave you leave to pouch my ferrets? Eh? What has a ferret to do in school? Eh? Idle again? Captain Butler, is he idle?"

"He is a dunce," said Mr. Butler, with a shrug.

"Dunce?" retorted Sir William, quickly. "Why should he be a dunce?"

When I have taught him? Granted long-legged wildcat thing. Silver Heels, had crept in.

I pretended not to notice her, and she stood behind me, very still. Clearly, she was reading my verses, and I became angry. Not to show it, I made out to whistle and to draw a picture of a fish on the slate. Then she knew I had seen her and laughed heartily.

"It is your hour for the stocks," I hinted.

"I won't go," she retorted.

"The Lord's will be done," said he, taking breath. "Who am I to ordain when he who fashioned you lowhead designed it to hold neither Latin nor the classics?"

"It pleases you to laugh, sir," I muttered.

"Pleases me! Pleases me, quotha! Lad, it stabs me like a French dirk, and I can't guard the thrust in silence. I have been wrong. If you are not born a scholar, twag the mint mark I could not read aright; and no blame to you, lad, no blame to you, Micky boy!"

His meaning was dawning upon me slowly, for what with the pain of my hand and the dizziness, I was perhaps more stupid than usual.

"No," said Sir William, with a thump of fist on his knee, "the college which my Lord Dartmouth has endowed is a haven for those who seek it, not a prison for men to be driven to."

He paused.

I gazed at him in silence while the blood, overrunning my leather pocket, ran down to my knee-buckles.

"Come, lad," he said, finally, brightening up, "learning lies not always between thumbed leaves. I wish only that you bear yourself modestly and nobly through the world; and that you keep faith with men, that you word, once given, shall never be withdrawn."

"I know you to be brave and honest; I know you to be a very Mohawk in the forest; I believe you to be merciful and tender underneath that boy's thoughtless and cruel hide."

"As for learning, I can do no more for you than I have done and offered to do. If it pleases you, you may go to England and learn arts, bearing and deportment you can acquire here with me. No! Well then, stay with us. I want you, Micky."

My heart was very soft now. I looked at Sir William with swelling affection.

"There is one last thing I wish to say to you, Micky."

"My name isn't Silver Heels," she observed. "Call me by my right name and perhaps I'll go—and perhaps I won't. So there, Mr. Micky Dunce!"

"If I call you Felicity Warren, will you go?" I inquired, cautiously.

"There! you have called me Felicity Warren!" she cried in triumph. She was like Sir William and niece to Sir Peter Warren, but to torment her, we feigned to believe her one of Mistress Molly's brood, half Mohawk, as were Esk and Peter; and it maddened her. Besides, had not the Mohawks dubbed her Silver Heels a year ago, when, with paked flying feet, she had beaten us all in the foot race before Sir William and half the people of the Six Nations?

The prize had been a Barlow jack-knife, which, before the race, I had looked upon as mine.

I seized the chalk and wrote high on the slate:

"Silver Heels is Mohock, she toes in like ducks."

She caught up the buckskin to wipe out the insult, feeling me till the ferret in my pocket jumped out and ran round and round the room.

I jostled her; then she gave me a blow and a quick shove, whereupon I stumbled, plunging her to the floor to rub her face with chalk.

She twisted and turned, kicking and striking, while I rubbed chalk into her skin, till of a sudden she coiled up and bit me clean through the hand.

I was on my feet with a bound; she also, all white in the face and her eyes aflame.

The blood began welling up, running into my palm and along the fingers to the floor. At that same instant I heard the door of the nursery open, and I knew that Sir William was coming through the hall to the schoolroom.

From instinct I thrust my wounded hand into my breeches pocket.

"Don't tell!" whispered Silver Heels, in a hoarse whisper.

Here is the jackknife!"

As I stood there, breathing hard, resolved to finish the wretched Prosperine quickly and let the meter go limping, behind me I heard the door stealthily open, and I knew that had scarce time to step to the slate when Sir William marched in.

He came straight toward me and started the slate whereupon my verses started back, white and unfinished; and at first his brows knitted and he said, "Fudge, fudge, fudge!" Then of a sudden he sat down on the bench, clapping his hand to his brow.

"O Lord!" said he, and fell a-laughing, while I, hot, ashamed, and a little dizzy, my breeches pocket being full of blood, gnawed my lips and flowered askance.

"The Lord's will be done," said he, taking breath. "Who am I to ordain when he who fashioned you lowhead designed it to hold neither Latin nor the classics?"

"It pleases you to laugh, sir," I muttered.

"Pleases me! Pleases me, quotha! Lad, it stabs me like a French dirk, and I can't guard the thrust in silence. I have been wrong. If you are not born a scholar, twag the mint mark I could not read aright; and no blame to you, lad, no blame to you, Micky boy!"

I seized the chalk and wrote high on the slate:

"Silver Heels is Mohock, she toes in like ducks."

She caught up the buckskin to wipe out the insult, feeling me till the ferret in my pocket jumped out and ran round and round the room.

I jostled her; then she gave me a blow and a quick shove, whereupon I stumbled, plunging her to the floor to rub her face with chalk.

She twisted and turned, kicking and striking, while I rubbed chalk into her skin, till of a sudden she coiled up and bit me clean through the hand.

I was on my feet with a bound; she also, all white in the face and her eyes aflame.

The blood began welling up, running into my palm and along the fingers to the floor. At that same instant I heard the door of the nursery open, and I knew that Sir William was coming through the hall to the schoolroom.

From instinct I thrust my wounded hand into my breeches pocket.

"Don't tell!" whispered Silver Heels, in a hoarse whisper.

Here is the jackknife!"

As I stood there, breathing hard, resolved to finish the wretched Prosperine quickly and let the meter go limping, behind me I heard the door stealthily open, and I knew that add," he said, gravely, almost sadly. "Perhaps I may again refer to it—but I pray that it may not be necessary."

I sat up and rubbed my eyes to clear them from the dewy fog of new which stole upward from my throbbing hand.

"It is this," he continued, in a low voice. "If it ever comes to you to choose between His Majesty our King and—and your native land—which God forbid!—go to your closet and kneel down, and atay there on your knees, hours, days!—until you have learned your own heart. Then—God go with you, Michael Cardigan!"

He rose, and his face was year older. Slowly the color came back into his cheeks.

"That is all," he said. "Where is that ferret? What! Running about unmuzzled! Hey! Vix! Vix! Come here, little reptile!"

"I'll catch her, sir," said I, stumbling forward.

But as I laid my hand on Vix the floor rose and struck me, and there I lay sprawling and senseless, with the blood running over the floor; and Sir William, believing me bitten by the ferret, pouched the poor beast and lifted me to a bed.

He must have seen my hand, however, for when a cup of cold water set me spluttering and blinking, I found my hand tied up in Sir William's handkerchief, and Sir William, eying me strangely,

"Then," said Sir William, with a strange smile of relief, "I shall not force you, Michael. May I honorably ask you how you come by this jackknife?"

I shook my head.

He smiled again and said: "Pray find our little Silver Heels and return to her the jackknife, which was her wampum belt of faith in the honor of a gentleman."

And so he walked away, smoothing the fur of the red-eyed ferret against his breast.

When Sir William left me in the schoolroom he left a lad of eighteen puffed up in a glow of pride—I was to be received at last as a man among men.

Clamped with importance, I cast a contemptuous eye upon my poem which embellished the great slate, and scooped it partly out with the buckskin.

"My books," said I to myself, "I will bestow upon Silver Heels and Esk, you too!"

In a sort of ecstasy I paraded the schoolroom, and it was not until he had called me thrice that I observed Mr. Butler standing within the doorway.

"Sir William dines early," he said in his cold, menacing way as I followed him downstairs. "If he has to wait your pleasure for his slice of roast, you will await his pleasure for the remainder of the day in the schoolroom."

"It is not true!" I said, stopping short in the lower hallway. "I am free of that ratty pit forever! And can I guard the thrust in silence. I have been wrong. If you are not born a scholar, twag the mint mark I could not read aright; and no blame to you, lad, no blame to you, Micky boy!"

His meaning was dawning upon me slowly, for what with the pain of my hand and the dizziness, I was perhaps more stupid than usual.

"No," said Sir William, with a thump of fist on his knee, "the college which my Lord Dartmouth has endowed is a haven for those who seek it, not a prison for men to be driven to."

He paused.

I gazed at him in silence while the blood, overrunning my leather pocket, ran down to my knee-buckles.

"Come, lad," he said, finally, brightening up, "learning lies not always between thumbed leaves. I wish only that you bear yourself modestly and nobly through the world; and that you keep faith with men, that you word, once given, shall never be withdrawn."

"I know you to be brave and honest; I know you to be a very Mohawk in the forest; I believe you to be merciful and tender underneath that boy's thoughtless and cruel hide."

"As for learning, I can do no more for you than I have done and offered to do. If it pleases you, you may go to England and learn arts, bearing and deportment you can acquire here with me. No! Well then, stay with us. I want you, Micky."

My heart was very soft now. I looked at Sir William with swelling affection.

"There is one last thing I wish to say to you, Micky."

"My name isn't Silver Heels," she observed. "Call me by my right name and perhaps I'll go—and perhaps I won't. So there, Mr. Micky Dunce!"

"If I call you Felicity Warren, will you go?" I inquired, cautiously.

"There! you have called me Felicity Warren!" she cried in triumph. She was like Sir William and niece to Sir Peter Warren, but to torment her, we feigned to believe her one of Mistress Molly's brood, half Mohawk, as were Esk and Peter; and it maddened her. Besides, had not the Mohawks dubbed her Silver Heels a year ago, when, with paked flying feet, she had beaten us all in the foot race before Sir William and half the people of the Six Nations?

The prize had been a Barlow jack-knife, which, before the race, I had looked upon as mine.

I seized the chalk and wrote high on the slate:

"Silver Heels is Mohock, she toes in like ducks."

She caught up the buckskin to wipe out the insult, feeling me till the ferret in my pocket jumped out and ran round and round the room.

I jostled her; then she gave me a blow and a quick shove, whereupon I stumbled, plunging her to the floor to rub her face with chalk.

She twisted and turned, kicking and striking, while I rubbed chalk into her skin, till of a sudden she coiled up and bit me clean through the hand.

I was on my feet with a bound; she also, all white in the face and her eyes aflame.

The blood began welling up, running into my palm and along the fingers to the floor. At that same instant I heard the door of the nursery open, and I knew that Sir William was coming through the hall to the schoolroom.

From instinct I thrust my wounded hand into my breeches pocket.

"Don't tell!" whispered Silver Heels, in a hoarse whisper.

Here is the jackknife!"

As I stood there, breathing hard, resolved to finish the wretched Prosperine quickly and let the meter go limping, behind me I heard the door stealthily open, and I knew that fell to thinking of those honored parents I had never seen: For the day that brought life to me had robbed my mother of her life, and my father, Captain Cardigan, lying with Wolfe before Quebec, had sent a runner to Sir William enjoining him to care for me should the chance of battle leave me orphaned.

With Wolfe then, my father had fallen before Quebec, and his dying eyes had seen the grenadiers wipe out the disgrace of Montmorency with dripping bayonets. So he had died with a smile, bidding Wolfe's regiment to keep on and sending word to the dying Wolfe that he would meet him a minute hence at Peter's gate in Heaven.

—Pain to taste of the freedom that was now mine. I went out and down the stairs, passing my lady Silver Heels strapped to a backboard and in a temper with her sampler.

"Oh, Micky," she said, "my bones ache, and Mistress Molly is with the baby, and the key is there on that brass nail!"

So I took the key and unlocked the stocks, giving her feet a pinch.

EIGHT B.C. CHAMPIONSHIPS BROUGHT TO CITY

Bolton Wanderers Regain First Division Status in English Football

Promoted to Senior Section by Gaining Tie With Blackpool

Just Noses Out West Ham United for Runner-Up Position in Second Division—Leicester City Drops From Top Division—List of Promotions Announced

LONDON, May 4 (CP).—Grumbling struggles at Blackpool and Portsmouth featured closing games in the English Soccer League, and as a result, Bolton Wanderers won promotion to the First Division along with Tottenham Hotspurs who will be the unlucky pair to drop from the first flight clubs to the Second Division.

Final standings at the bottom of the First Division and the top of the Second were not decided until Saturday, but Arsenal had already won the championship and positions in other sections of the league had already been settled.

Bolton Wanderers and Blackpool each scored one goal in the Lancashire derby at the Seaside's grounds. The draw was sufficient to put the Wanderers ahead of West Ham United in the race for promotion, their goal average being much superior. The first half was scoreless, and after the interval Bolton was presented with a gift-goal, when the Blackpool goalkeeper stumbled and Westwood was able to shoot into an empty net. Watnough equalized for Blackpool fifteen minutes later.

Leicester City made a gallant effort at Portsmouth, but were held to a 1-1 draw, while Middlesbrough and Chelsea divided four goals on the Northerners' ground.

ARSENAL BEATEN
Ramage's goal six minutes after the interval enabled Derby County to defeat Arsenal at Highbury. Two of the gunners were injured. Both returned later, but Davidson was obviously in pain.

There were remarkable scenes at Brentford and Birmingham. Thousands swarmed over the pitch at Brentford when P. W. Blinder, member of the Football League management committee, presented the club and players with the Second Division championship shield and medals.

At Birmingham the spectators gathered in front of the dressing rooms cheering for Joe Bradford, the team's international inside right, who has been placed on the transfer list after fifteen years' service with the club. Eventually the old favorite appeared and a band played "Auld Lang Syne." The crowd remained silent, the majority of them bereaved.

LAY BALL! That familiar phrase 35 well known to baseball fans, will resound at the Royal Athletic Park Wednesday evening at 6 o'clock as the Eagles and the Navy, Commercial League Baseball Nines, go about the business of trying out the lid of the local baseball season.

Eagles, last year's champions, have their championship practically intact and, in addition, have secured the services of Jimmy Proudlove, Sons of Canada hurler, who twirled in the Senior League.

Navy will be making their debut in the hardball game with a line-up of new players, many of them recruited from outside points. From the Prairies and other points east of Vancouver comes many players who

UP-ISLANDERS ARE DEFEATED

Nanaimo and South Wellington Juveniles Lose on Mainland

VANCOUVER, May 4 (CP).—Nanaimo made two unsuccessful bids for British Columbia juvenile football supremacy in the Con Jones Cup competition here today, when Sam Hindmarch's Second Division eleven lost to West Point Grey Spartans, 2-0, and South Wellington, a First Division team, was defeated by Province Bluebirds, 1-0.

Nanaimo's Second Division team played excellent football, but just couldn't get the breaks. Watson, left fullback, was their outstanding player. McDonald, in goal for Point Grey, was unbreakable.

The Spartans' first goal came about ten minutes after the start when Loutit, the right half, netted from a penalty kick. The half ended 1-0.

The Spartans played better in the second half and scored their second goal about ten minutes from time when Wilkinson tallied from a corner kick.

PLAYED FINE GAME
Johnstone, in goal for the South Wellington eleven, played a wonderful game. The Bluebirds had the best of play for most of the game and would have registered more goals if it had not been for his many fine saves.

Ovovsky scored the lone goal for the Vancouver team about ten minutes from the start of the game. South Wellington made a strong effort in the last part of the game, but could not get through to score.

The game is slated at the Royal Athletic Park and the kick-off is set for 2:30 o'clock. The Mainlanders are bringing over a smart club for the match in hopes of turning back the season. Yale won all three of the preliminary races.

Yale Crew Defeated

PHILADELPHIA, May 4 (AP).—A smooth, powerful University of Pennsylvania crew celebrated its seasonal debut today by defeating a highly-rated Yale shell and an experienced Columbia boat over the Henley distance—one mile and five-sixteenths—and won the Blackwell Cup regatta for the first time since the trophy was put in competition for the three universities in 1927.

Pennsylvania's triumph over Yale by a margin of three-quarters of the Red and Blue's shell was the first major upset of the recently inaugurated Eastern intercollegiate rowing season. Yale won all three of the preliminary races.

MUZZ PATRICK WINS HEAVYWEIGHT TITLE BY STOPPING CALLAN

Scores Technical Kayo in Second Round in Feature Bout at Armories—Rex Carey and Biff Griffin Lift Crowns—Five Wrestling Championships Come to City—Pete Tyson Stars

Reigning monarchs of British Columbia amateur boxing and wrestling circles were crowned yesterday evening at the Armories, Bay Street, as the annual provincial championship meet staged under the auspices of the Canadian Scottish Regiment was brought to a close.

Close to 1,000 fans witnessed the bouts, which produced plenty of good mixing and some excellent wrestling. At the conclusion of the show the championship trophies were presented to the newly-crowned monarchs by His Honor J. W. Fordham Johnson, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province.

Five wrestling and three boxing titles were won by Victoria fighters and wrestlers, with the remaining championships, seven in the boxing division and two in the wrestling section, going to visiting boxers and matmen.

SHOWS GREAT FORM

Displaying championship form from the first round of the going, Murray Patrick, good-looking Victoria heavyweight and son of Lester Patrick, manager of the New York Rangers hockey squad, sprang the biggest upset of the tournament when he registered a technical K.O. over Louis Callan, Canadian Scottish, after one minute and twenty-two seconds of the second round. With all the confidence in the world, and the gameness of a veteran battler, Patrick went about the job of winning the title in spectacular fashion and floored Callan for a six count in the first round.

The encounter was brought to a dramatic climax in the next round, when a good mix of technical K.O. over Louis Callan, Canadian Scottish, after one minute and twenty-two seconds of the second round. With all the confidence in the world, and the gameness of a veteran battler, Patrick went about the job of winning the title in spectacular fashion and floored Callan for a six count in the first round.

It was a great victory for Patrick, fighting his fourth fight, and the worst defeat the veteran Louis Callan has taken in his lengthy career in the ring.

The finals were featured by double victories in the wrestling division, where Peter Tyson, Canadian Scottish, won the welterweight and lightweight titles, and Harry M. Knight, Vancouver freeman, won the light-heavyweight and heavyweight crowns for his fifth straight year.

Fighting in the semi-final of the featherweight division, Julius Troll, Vancouver, was given the call over Dick Atwood, Canadian Scottish, after a good mix of technical K.O. improved as the bout continued and scored a popular victory. Atwood weighed 124 pounds and Troll one pound less.

"Biff" Griffin, rugged Hillcrest battler, fighting under the colors of the Canadian Scottish, wrestled the British Columbia lightweight crown from Charlie Jordan, Canadian Scottish, Victoria, when he scored a technical K.O. in the final stages of the extra round. A right cross to the chin sent the defending champion to the canvas for a pine count and, as the bout continued, Griffin threw plenty of telling blows with Jordan offering little resistance. The match ended when Jordan's seconds tossed the towel in the centre of the ring. Griffin weighed 134 pounds and Jordan 133 pounds.

In a wild slugging bout, which was a mixture of boxing and wrestling, Robert Hickie, Vancouver, 140 pounds, slugged his way to victory over Bill Midan, South Wellington, 145 pounds, in the semi-final of the welterweight division.

CAREY TOO GOOD
Rex Carey, Canadian Scottish middleweight, threw too many gloves for Gordon Grant, McLeure, B.C., and after dropping him for a nine count in the third round, was awarded a technical K.O. after one minute and five seconds of fighting, when Referee Al Davies, Victoria, stopped the fight to save the visiting battler from further punishment. Carey dropped his opponent for a six count just as the bell ended the second round. Carey weighed 153 pounds and Grant 152 pounds.

Frank Glover, Vancouver 165 pounds, fought his way to the final of the light-heavyweight division by punching out a popular decision over Gordon Watson, Vancouver, 170 pounds, in a furious mix. It was a free-mixing bout and the fans gave the boys a great hand at its conclusion. Glover scored a nine-count knockdown in the last round and punished Watson for the remainder of the mix, but he finished standing up.

YOUNGSTER WINS
Fifteen-year-old Julius Troll, Vancouver, 134 pounds, displayed plenty of courage in his featherweight championship mix with Harry M. Knight, Kamloops, 125 pounds, and after an extra round was given the decision. The bout was called a draw at the end of the three rounds, and in the extra session the youthful Vancouver battler had the edge. Troll, shorter and younger than his Kamloops opponent, drew the plaudits of the fans for his gameness, and when he was awarded the call at the end of the mix, the thunderous applause echoed throughout the spacious Armories.

Flooding his opponent for an eight-count in the second round, and throwing many more telling punches, Robert Hickie, Vancouver, punched out a decision over "Kid" Garner, Victoria Athletic Club, after plenty of heavy mixing, in the welterweight final. Garner put up a game scrap all of the way, but was not just good enough for his opponent. Hickie weighed 140 pounds and Garner seven pounds more.

To the continued boos of an apparently dissatisfied crowd, Frank Glover, Vancouver, was awarded the call over Ross Young, Siskamous, in the final of the light-heavyweight division. The bout was featured by the wild swinging of the worst bout of the evening. There was little in the mix at the finish. Both boys weighed 165 pounds.

ONLY ENTRY
Peter Tassin, Ladysmith, was awarded the flyweight championship, being the only entrant in this division. Gordon Currie-Smith, Vancouver bantamweight, won the British Columbia crown by default from Douglas Miller, Vancouver.

CITY AND THISTLES REACH MCGAVIN CUP FINAL

Former XI Defeats Wests and Latter Downs Dockers 2-1

Two Goals in Final Half Give Victoria City 3-2 Decision Over Greenshirts in First Division Match—Goals in Late Stages Give Saanich Close Victory

Garnering one-goal victories, Victoria City and Saanich Thistles marched into the final of the McGavin Cup series in the First Division of the Victoria and District Football League, yesterday afternoon, at the Royal Athletic Park.

The former eleven rallied in the second half to beat out Victoria West, 3-2, while the suburban lads did exactly the same thing to nose out Equimait, 2-1, in the second match of the double-header.

Despite baseball weather, a fair crowd watched the teams in action. The field was dry and clouds of dust floated about continually during the fixtures. At times the teams played good football, and at other stages they fell back into rugged exchanges.

Forcing the issue from the start, the Wests were soon storming around the City goal, but a stubborn defence held them out. In the early minutes, Rowe made a brilliant stop from Archie Purse, and the City went away on a few minutes of attacking, but Restall was safe and cleared every effort to score. The Wests broke away fast and Glancy hit the side of the net with a rapid shot, and minutes later, at the other end, G. Payne hooked in C. Robbins' cross, but Restall saved nicely.

Scores on Penalty

With the greenshirts on the offence again, hands were called against Bill Halkett, and Gordie Bell registered from the spot with a terrific drive, which just grazed Rowe's hands as it tore its way into the net. Less than three minutes

Realizes His Ambition

When Babe Ruth, the King of Swat, was ill in New York in 1925, the boy in the above picture, Johnnie Howe, then aged ten, was a performer deemed of such promise by the Cincinnati Reds as to be farmed out this year for a season.

Chalmers got his hands on, but failed to hold. Fighting hard as time went along, the Thistles finally tied the count when Browne tallied with a well-directed drive eight minutes from time. About three minutes before the end, the same player scored the deciding goal with another strong kick.

McMillan refereed and the teams follow:

Victoria West—Restall; Reside; Storey; Lorrain; Barnes; Stewart; Tuthill; Bell; A. Purse; Smith; Glancy and B. Bell.

Victoria City—Rowe; Stofor; Halkett; Smith; G. Robbins; Gibson; Youson; Barnswell; C. Robbins; J. Payne and G. Payne.

THISTLES TRIUMPH

Driving in two goals in a last-minute Garrison finish, Saanich Thistles eked out a narrow decision over Equimait in the second week in a replay match, 2-1. The teams fought to a 3-3 deadlock last week.

For the first ten minutes the Thistles had the edge, but wild shooting prevented them from breaking into the score column. Play swung back and Chalmers pulled off some neat saves from the Dockers' front line, and then the Thistles retaliated and DeCosta was injured when he stopped a hard drive and the game was delayed for two minutes. End-to-end play marked the next fifteen minutes with neither team able to score.

Play at times was ragged and the game was rough in stages, several players receiving slight injuries through wild kicking and heavy checking. A scoreless first half was the outcome of it.

Not long after the change-over, Sage skied over the bar and then Foulkes kicked DeCosta, but he was safe. Sage was wounded during one of the attacks, but soon recovered. The Thistles made two changes, Gibbons and Leggett going on for Speller and Crowe, and shortly after Joe Watt, fullback, registered the opener with a long shot, which

COUNTY CRICKET

LONDON, May 4 (CP).—Closing scores in first-class county cricket matches started today were:

Somerset, 313 runs for seven wickets (Frank Lee 98, Wellard 84 not out, vs. Surrey; at The Oval).

Warwickshire, 228 (R. E. S. Wyatt 103 not out; Gloucestershire, 78 for three, at Birmingham).

Sussex, 288 (J. Park 75, H. Parks 79 not out; vs. Leicestershire, at Leicester).

Yorkshire, 228 (Leyland 76; M.C.C. 84 (Verity six for 34, Macaulay 3 for 18); at Lord's).

Worcestershire, 191 (Martin 60, Gibbons 59; Oxford University, 165 for three (Deen 76, Halliday 60); at Oxford).

PALO ALTO, Cal., May 4 (AP).—Rolling up the largest winning point total in the twenty-five-year track and field rivalry between the two institutions, University of Southern California's Trojan team defeated Stanford, 1934 national collegiate champion, 88 to 45, here today.

HAS BEEN IDLE

Against his chances is the fact he hasn't played all winter and got in only a couple of weeks drilling over the London Hunt Club course before sailing. It is largely a question of whether he can lift his game to championship peak within a short time. His Canadian henchmen are up against the same problem.

Except for the British Columbians, Dick Moore and Ken Black, the Canadians have been away from golf courses since late last fall. But Somerville left home confident that the team would achieve something like real form for the big test.

This is Sandy's twelfth season of major tournament play. He was runner-up for the Canadian amateur in 1923 and won the event for the first time the following year, then went on to capture it three times more before he started the world at large by winning the United States

All his other interests in sport have been virtually abandoned in favor of golf. He plays bedminton in winter, but only moderately well. In his school days he was regarded as one of the most promising cricketers ever developed in Canada. Ridley College has yet to turn out his equal.

He went to University of Toronto and started at both football and hockey. He was an exceptionally accurate drop-kicker, and he might have made a professional career out of hockey. He was a good ball player, too.

SANDY HOPING TO LIFT GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP

Somerville Will Be Dangerous Threat in Forthcoming British Amateur

LONDON, Ont., May 4 (CP).—When Sandy Somerville leads his Canadian team of nine into the British amateur golf championship, late this month, the quiet London player will be linked with W. Lawson, Little, of San Francisco, defending champion, as the man to beat. This is Sandy's second attempt to lift the third major amateur title within his reach, and the only one of the three he hasn't captured. He went to the fifth round in the gruelling match-play test in 1933 before being eliminated. This time he ranks as one of Little's most dangerous challengers.

Four-times amateur champion of Canada and winner of the United States amateur in 1932, Somerville remains Canada's greatest amateur. It required an American, Scotty Campbell, of Seattle, to keep him from winning the Canadian amateur for the fifth time last fall at Montreal. If he's "hot" in England, his friends here believe, Sandy will come through with a victory.

Ken Lawson Gains Lead in Play-Off For Cup Position

Uplands Club Shotmaker and Present City Champion Shoots Fine 72 at Colwood Links—Brynjolfsson Next With 74—Jubilee Tournery Gets Away to Great Opening

Playing the same sensational brand of golf which carried him to his first city championship last year, Ken Lawson, young divotter from the Uplands Club, took a two-stroke lead over a field of six other contenders for a berth on the British Columbia Willingdon Cup team, yesterday, at the Royal Colwood Links, as the curtain went up on the Victoria Jubilee handicap tournament. Lawson toured the long and well-trapped links in 72, two wallops over par, after a masterful exhibition.

He leads Harold Brynjolfsson, from the same club, by two strokes. Harold was on his game, too, and returned a 74, one stroke less than front of the trio deadlocked behind, Bob Morrison, Uplands; Freddy Painter, George Vale, and Jimmy Todd, Oak Bay, who had 75's. Dave Randall, Colwood, and Eric Wright each had 79's, and will have to match par in the next three rounds to stay in the running.

The boys will play eighteen holes again today and finish up tomorrow with thirty-six holes. Survivor of the test will travel East to Hamilton as a member of the Provincial side, which will be defending the trophy at a warm-up session to the staging of the Canadian amateur.

Along with the handicap events, Freddy Painter topped the men with a net card of 67, which gives him a three-stroke advantage, while Mrs. Darcus-Hodder headed the women's event with a net 77. In the men's meet, J. W. Ruggles, H. Brynjolfsson and J. A. M. Knox, Brynjolfsson and J. A. M. Knox, tried for runner-up position with 70's. Eight others had 72's.

Plays and Players

Songs, Romance, Dances In Sparkling New Revue

Double romance proceeds along a gay, tuneful way in "Robertia," R.K.O.-Radio's spectacular new musical production starring Irene Dunne, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, now at the Capitol Theatre.

Based upon the stage play which made theatrical history on Broadway and in all of the larger Eastern cities, the picture deals with love in a Paris gown shop. Jerome Kern wrote the music. Some of the original numbers from the stage play are retained, and Kern has written several new hits especially for the picture.

Miss Dunne sings, Astaire and Miss Rogers dance, and a spectacular fashion show climaxes the intensely human and altogether logical story.

The principal love interest is between Miss Dunne and Randolph Scott, but there is more than a suggestion of romance in the sparkling repartee and gay camaraderie of Astaire and Miss Rogers.

Included in the supporting cast are such favorites as Helen Westley, Victor Varconi, Claire Dodd, Luis Alberni and Ferdinand Murer. A bevy of most beautiful girls add eye appeal as the fashion mannequing, and a dance band, composed of radio and night club headliners, supplies some sparkling melody under the expert guidance of Astaire.

JOHN BOLES SEEN IN NEW PICTURE

Singing Star Plays Important Role in Broadway Hit "Music in the Air" at Playhouse

An interesting coincidence comes to light in connection with the cast for Erich Pommer's Fox Film spectacle, "Music in the Air," showing at the Playhouse Theatre tomorrow.

Just eight years ago Gloria Swanson was vacationing in New York while waiting for the scripts of her next picture, "Love of Sunya." By way of killing time she attended William A. Brady's production of "Kitty's Knees," a Broadway musical show. She was possibilities in the romantically slender youngster who sang the leading role.

The youngster's name was John Boles, which at that time meant nothing outside of New York City, and very little inside. At Gloria's urging he agreed to tear up his prospective Broadway contracts and become her leading man in "Loves of Sunya."

The picture was made that fall, marking Boles' debut on the screen. Though the actor frankly admits its success was chiefly due to Miss Swanson's efforts, it did not, however, to keep him in Hollywood until the coming of the talkies and his subsequent fame.

Now the two celebrities appear together again for the first time since 1926 in the Pommer production of the Jerome Kern-Oscar Hammerstein second opera, "Music in the Air," also featuring Douglas Montgomery and June Lang.

COLUMBIA OFFERS BRILLIANT STORY

"Flirtation Walk" Colorful Tale of West Point With Dick Powell in Lead

West Point's best horseman, Lieut. Joe Cummins, is one of the numerous cadets used as extras and in minor parts of "Flirtation Walk," the first National production, with Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell and Pat O'Brien, which was produced on actual West Point locations, and which is showing at the Columbia Theatre tomorrow.

In addition to Cummins and other West Point cadets used in individual sequences, as well as in the mass parade portions of "Flirtation Walk," the University of Southern California polo team, which made the 3,000-mile trek and the continent to play the Army team, also appear in the picture.

One of the thrilling scenes in the picture is the graduation drill of the cadet corps, which is considered the most highly trained body of men in the world.

Those taking part are William Allen, as Thomas Greenleaf, a cantankerous old innkeeper; Florence Robertson, as his wife, Rhoda Wagon, as his lovely daughter; Joan Arthur Hawkes, as Gerald, son of the village squire; Herbert Dodd, as Godolphin; William Mills, as Beverly Gordon; Clark, as Blaguet; and Don Brewster, as Sir Robert Armand.

Tramp—Lady, I'm a sick man. A nice doctor fixed me some medicine, and I would like to ask you to give me something to take it with.

Lady—You would like a spoon and a glass of water, I suppose?

Tramp—No, mum; not that. The doctor said I was to take the medicine after-meal, and I thought you might contribute the meal.

Three Stars of Comedy

George Barber, Walter C. Kelly and Andy Clyde in a Scene From "McFadden's Flats," the Feature Attraction Now at the Dominion Theatre.

Fast Moving Comedy Now On Screen at Dominion

The memorable battles between the McFaddens and the McTavishes in their classic feud is the background of the amiable and always interesting Paramount film, "McFadden's Flats," which opened Friday at the Dominion Theatre to introduce Walter Kelly, beloved vaudeville, to the screen.

Supported by Andy Clyde, Jane Darwell, Richard Cromwell and Betty Furness, Kelly acts the role of the battling Irishman who rises from brick-laying to wealth without once relenting in his feud with his Social enemy.

Underneath the wordy battles of these two old "hardshells" is a genuine affection. When Kelly gets into financial trouble, Clyde secretly supports his credit at the bank and enables him to complete the modern tenement flats of his dreams.

But Kelly, under the delusion that he is wealthy, splurges and soon gets into trouble again. He learns the truth, and finally couples with Clyde to get George Barber, a millionaire builder, behind the business. The friendship of the two old feudals is finally cemented when their children fall in love.

The whole is written and directed with rare insight into the lives and thinking of the people it portrays. There are moments of high comedy in Clyde's economical use of electricity in his barber shop, in the bricklaying contest between Kelly and Barber with books for bricks, and in Kelly's big party for his East Side neighbors.

Kelly, long famous for his "Virginia Judge" characterization, makes a genuine flesh-and-blood creation out of this doughty McFadden, with his genial democracy, his fresh humor and his bragger manner that hides a heart of gold.

SCREEN MUSICAL BILLED TONIGHT

"Gold Diggers of 1935" Feature Presentation at Capitol at Midnight

In a Berkeley spectacle almost anyplace can be expected to dance except the girls.

In "Gold Diggers of 1935" a whole city did a shuffle. In "Wonder Bar" a room full of pillars, huge fluted columns, and a camera turned some of a suit through a "tunnel of girls."

In "Gold Diggers of 1935," Berkeley's newest contribution to the National's series of spectacular screen entertainments, which comes to the Capitol Theatre at the midnight show tonight, it's piano that dance.

London's department heads at First National got used to Berkeley's amazing requests but his sudden demand for sixty grand pianos, exactly alike and all painted white, came as close to causing apoplexy on the lot as anything this unique genius has ever asked for.

There is an all star cast in the picture which includes Dick Powell, Josephine Merrell, Gloria Stuart, Alice Brady, Glenda Farrell, Frank McHugh, Hugh Herbert, Joseph Cawthorn and a chorus of 300 beautiful girls.

A doctor was startled by a middle-aged woman bursting into his room and asking him to operate on her at once as she had swallowed her false teeth.

She usually took them out before going to bed, she said, but on the previous night she had forgotten to do so. In the morning her mouth was empty. She had had an acute pain, she must have swallowed the teeth. She begged the doctor to save her life.

Preparations were made for an immediate operation, but before it began a telegram came from the woman's house. It read, "Return immediately. Teeth found under bed."

Transportation Expert Is Here

Mr. Wilson has been connected in past years with many transportation and power companies in Canada and is well known in Dominion engineering circles. Each year he spends several months in South America as consultant on transportation and city planning problems to the Brazilian Traction, Light & Power Company, Limited.

CULBERTSON ON CONTRACT

By Ely Culbertson
World's Champion Player and Greatest Card Analyst

KNOCKING HEADS TOGETHER

The sinking sensation which any hard working dealer feels when he finds a terrible division of the trump suit may be fatal if he gives up hope. With courage and a bit of ingenuity, however, he may bring about a situation in which the opponents' winning trump and another winning card held in a side suit may fall on the same trick, thus forcing a waste of two winners for only a single win.

Leslie P. Oberlander, of New York, offers the following example of recovery after a discouraging shock.

South, dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.

♠ A K J
♥ 10 7 6
♦ K 7 4
♣ A Q 8 3

West opened hearts, winning the first trick and continuing the suit. South ruffed and led a trump. Immediately discovered the break. South then proceeded to strip the hand. He ruffed a heart, cashed three top clubs and ruffed the fourth club from dummy. He was lucky enough to find East with four clubs, and skillful enough to take advantage of it. When he then cashed the ace and king of diamonds, East was reduced to trumps only. South had a losing diamond, but it coincided with the trick which must be lost to East's eight of spades, and on this lead West was thrown in. He had no choice but to lead a spade into North's ace-jack and five-odd were made.

The actual bidding was somewhat unconventional, because South opened with a semi-psychic bid of one spade. West overcalled in hearts and North forced, bidding four clubs. Then, when South (who could not pass a force) bid four spades, North raised to five as a declaration in the South pin the hand was made. Watch our exposition in this column Tuesday.

PROBLEM IS POPULATION

Keep Up Defences and Sit Tight, Advice of Oriental Authority

Sailing from Victoria yesterday on the Ss. Empress of Asia for Manchukuo via Japan, was George Bronson Rea, official adviser to the Manchukuo Government. Mr. Rea has been on an unofficial visit to Washington and is now returning to his post.

The Oriental problem, in Mr. Rea's opinion—and it should be worth something as he has spent some thirty-two years in various parts of the Orient—is neither politics nor economics exactly, although indirectly they may have something to do with it. It is population.

In the Japanese Empire there are now 90,000,000 persons, and in twenty years from now there will be 120,000,000; in China there are 500,000,000, a good guess in lieu of statistics, had in twenty years there may be 100,000,000 more; in Russia there are 170,000,000, and the Russians are increasing at the rate of 3,000,000 a year.

GREAT BREEDERS

"Cut that estimate in half if you like, but at the same time there will still be enough to make an imposing figure," Mr. Rea believes in actualities. He knows that the Orientals are great breeders and that they are creating surplus population eight times faster than the white man. He asks "what are we going to do about it?"—that's the one, perhaps only question.

"If you build a wall around Japan in Asia and then go to sleep on the job, you can expect just one thing: the flood is going to break that barrier at the weakest point. That's the thing for the people on this continent to recognize, particularly those on the Pacific Coast. You can't stop millions of people from fighting for the right to live. And don't forget that these Japanese are born fighters. What can we do? We can keep our defences up and sit tight. If there's going to be a war let them fight it out on the plains of Asia."

CLOSED TO HER

He pointed out that in order to look after her people, Japan had become highly industrialized. The limit in that direction had been reached, and she finds the markets of the world closed to her. Other countries exclude her' racially and set tariffs against her goods.

"In China, Chiang Kai Shek is fighting for his life, and if he falls, there will be a 'Red' government there. There are a great many Communists against him; they don't know what Communism really means, but starving people are easily led. When the Chinese wake up they are going to industrialize, too, just as the Japanese have done."

TO BRING PEACE

"Japan has done in Manchukuo just what every other country in the world has done at one time or another," Mr. Rea continued. He believes that the new Government of Manchukuo will bring peace and prosperity to the people and benefit to the rest of the world.

Mr. Rea is a former newspaperman and has conducted papers in Manila and Shanghai. He was a war correspondent in Cuba for the New York Herald, and for the New York World in the Spanish-American War. He was an adviser to Dr. Sun Yat Sen and the Chinese Ministry of Railways, among other positions. He has written books, has been being just off the press, and is entitled "The Case for Manchukuo."

HOST TO GREAT BOMBING PLANE

Ship Landed at French Airport With Passengers After Fast Flight

LE BOURGET, France, May 4 (AP)—The airport played host today for the first time to what French aviation men described as a German bombing plane.

The Lufthansa passenger plane from Berlin arrived today at Le Bourget in the record time of three hours and fifty-two minutes, averaging 285 kilometres an hour and at time going over 300 kilometres (186.4 miles an hour).

The plane carried seven passengers. When the French baggage crew sought the regular baggage compartment, the German crew told them it had been changed and was now in the interior. The baggage men found the new compartment and declared that in removing the baggage they saw regular bomb launching apparatus. The plane stirred particular interest because it is one of the newest German tri-motored planes built on finer lines than the older ships and is equipped with American motors.

Jane Dixon Says:

TRAIL OF TRUE LOVE OFFEN OBSCURE—GIRL IN LOVE WITH BOY WHO IS ENGAGED TO HER BEST FRIEND—WANTS TO KNOW RIGHT PATH TO FOLLOW

There are times when the course of true love, which should be a happy, shining path, becomes an obscure trail through a wilderness—a trail beset with sharp curves, treacherous bogs, all sorts of hidden dangers to confuse and trap the traveler. Here is such a trail:

Dear Virginia Vane: The time has come when I must make an important decision in my life. I want to be fair, but I am uncertain which way to turn.

A young man and myself are very much in love. He is engaged to my best friend. He came to our town while I was away at college and I did not meet him for almost a year. During this year he went around with my friend and finally proposed to her. Shortly after their engagement was announced I came home. The moment I met him I knew he was the "only man" and he felt and still feels the same way about me.

We have tried to control our hearts by using our heads. I went away on a long visit so we couldn't see each other. It's been no use. We are both miserable when we are separated.

He has not broken his engagement because I have begged him not to do so. My friend is proud and she loves him, too, deeply. She will be badly hurt and will think that we have been deceitful and disloyal. She is popular and her family is powerful, and I'm afraid all her friends who are my friends too will criticize the young man and me and distrust us.

Recently he has been offered a very fine position in a distant city.

He has asked me to marry him and go with him to this place, in which we can make a fresh start. Would it be fair for me to accept?

FRIEND DUE TO BE DISAPPOINTED ANYWAY

Answer: Accepting him is the only way in which you can play fair, my dear Vane. Your mistake has been in not allowing your young man to be truthful with your friends as soon as you found how you felt about each other. You say your friend is proud. No woman with pride would want to marry a man who had another woman enshrined in his heart.

Since your friend loves the young man, there is no way to avoid hurting her. But the wound will heal and the scar will be as nothing compared to the scar that would be left by the knowledge she had married a man who did not love her—but who had accepted her from a sense of duty. Oh, yes, Vane, she would know, sooner or later, for it is inevitable that thwarted love is impatient, irascible, cruel.

Your young man should go to your friend at once and ask her to release him from his promise. Then the two of you may marry and go away to your new life as quickly and as unostentatiously as possible. The path just ahead is difficult, I know, but not more difficult than the path you've been traveling. If you will play fair with yourself, your young man and your friend, you will find that somewhere just ahead is the happy highway.

Uncertain: You are in love with a young married woman and she returns your affection. She is separated from her husband—but is not divorced. Her parents approve of you, but think that under the circumstances you should not see so much of one another. You want to know if it is "all right" for you to call on her and take her places.

I see no harm in calling on the young woman so long as you do not frequent her home. As to "taking her places," that would depend on where you take her, how often you escort her, and your conduct when together. Above all, you should consider the attitude of the husband. If he is resentful or belligerent, he might consider you an intruder, and the affair could very easily end in tragedy. You should remember, too, that prying eyes are quick and nimble tongues sharp. It is the duty of love to protect loved ones from those who impute evil to the most innocent of friendships or the most honest of intents.

Accept the advice of her parents. Even in love it is better to be safe than to be sorry.

Elaine: If your mother's sole objection to the man is that he is ten years your senior, I'm sure her prejudice can be overcome if you will use patience and reason with her instead of defiance. The fact that you enjoy one another's company so much and have such good times together proves that through there is a difference in the ages of the man and yourself, your emotions and your tastes are harmonious, and harmony is more important in human relations than years.

When your mother was a girl, age meant considerably more than it does now, when none of us need be older than we feel, look and act.

SAANICH ADDING TO BUILDINGS

Permits in Adjoining District Committee to Be Taken Out for Home Structures

Included in the construction work in Saanich for which permits were issued last week were four houses. The total permits issued were thirteen, with a value of $7,920, which included repairs to a number of houses.

N. W. Freeman is to erect a $2,000 house of five rooms on Blenkinsop Road. The contractor is A. Stewart.

A five-roomed house estimated to cost $1,900 will be built by J. Henson at 13 George Road.

W. S. Davison will construct a four-roomed house estimated to cost $1,200, on Clark Avenue.

On Davida Avenue, C. Thom will build a three-roomed house estimated to cost $1,100.

Victoria High School students were ushered back to school after the Easter vacation with the results of their recent tests. Many students will be studying hard from now until the final examinations in June.

Virginia Graham and Helen Unsworth defeated Ann Moyes and Margaret Nason, 6-2, 6-3, to annex the girls' doubles tennis championship.

Coach Mona Miller held a rehearsal of club, dumbbell and wand drills in the school gymnasium on Friday afternoon.

The Victoria High School annual track meet will be held either May 29 or 31. Many of the boys and girls track stars are working out regularly in preparation for the meet. The result of this will probably be that old track records will fall by the wayside.

A large number of the choir girls will sing during the service at Parliament Square tomorrow morning.

The school tennis courts have been well patronized during the past week. The good weather has allowed all players to get some well-enjoyed practising. The girls of the school are signifying their entrance into the singles tennis tournament which will start on May 14—Bourne for the boys' singles will be obtained shortly and play will get under way.

In preparation for a challenge softball match with Normal School, the following girls will try out for positions: D. Dale Johnson, A. Moyes, E. Parson, V. Durant, M. Purdy, E. LeBus, H. Smith, V. Simpson, V. Edwards, K. Gahan, L. Bell, P. Addison, A. King, M. Whyte, M. Mulligan, E. Sargent, D. Roper, A. Peden, L. Simpson, M. Nason, V. Francis, L. Macdonald, P. Leavitt, E. Draper, H. Bruce, C. Nicol and E. Holland. The practice tryout will be held on Wednesday at 3:30 p.m.

Business and editorial work on the school's annual, The Canosun, is nearing completion. The compilation of all material will probably take a week or ten days, and after this has been done, the magazine will go to press. John Armstrong, editor, has the editorials well in hand.

The first of a series of vocational talks sponsored by the school students' council was held in the library on Wednesday, V. L. Denton, principal of the Normal School, gave an interesting talk on "Teaching."

Struan Robertson and Jack Green will uphold the negative in the debate, "Resolved, that Canada is too overgoverned for the good of the Canadian people," against a team from Oak Bay High School. The debate will be held Wednesday afternoon at the Oak Bay High school.

Although the junior basketball league was not finished, there will be no more games played this year, as the gymnasium will be in use by the physical training classes. Useful coaching was given to the beginners, however, and in this way accomplished as well.

John Kyle will give an industrial vocational talk at the Victoria High School on Thursday afternoon. This address will be of greatest interest to the technical students.

KING AND QUEEN IN NEWS PICTURES

BEFORE THE WAR

King George and the German Kaiser reviewing German troops at Potsdam a few months before the outbreak of the Great War. Wilhelm was a first cousin to King George, and the visit to Germany was made to ease the growing animosity between the two houses.

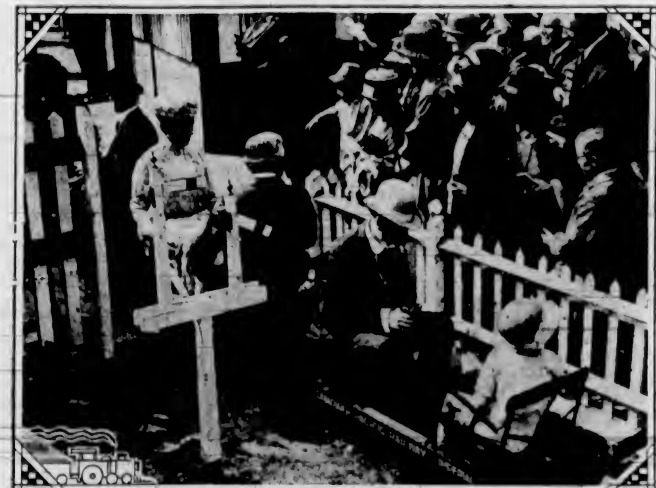

AFTER HIS ILLNESS

Around Easter of 1929 the King suffered a severe illness and this picture, taken shortly after, shows Their Majesties at Wollaton, Nottingham, at an agricultural show in which the King always took a keen interest. He had a keen knowledge of farming.

AT EXHIBITION

The King and Queen visited the Ideal Homes Exhibition at Olympia, London, and inspected the representation of the King's house. The actual house is being given to the King this year as a Jubilee present. Photo shows the King and Queen in front of the door of their house.

RIDES ON MINIATURE

This informal picture of Their Majesties was taken during a visit to an exhibition in England. The King and Queen are here shown about to start on a ride on a miniature railway. They are about to commence their tour while admiring crowds watch the fun.

A TRUSTED ADVISER

King George conversing with the Duke of Connaught, one of his most trusted advisers from the moment he ascended the throne. This picture was taken in 1928 at an installation ceremony.

AS A YOUTH

Wearing a naval uniform, His Majesty is shown in this picture just after he had reached his twentieth birthday and while he was still actively engaged in his naval training with the British Fleet.

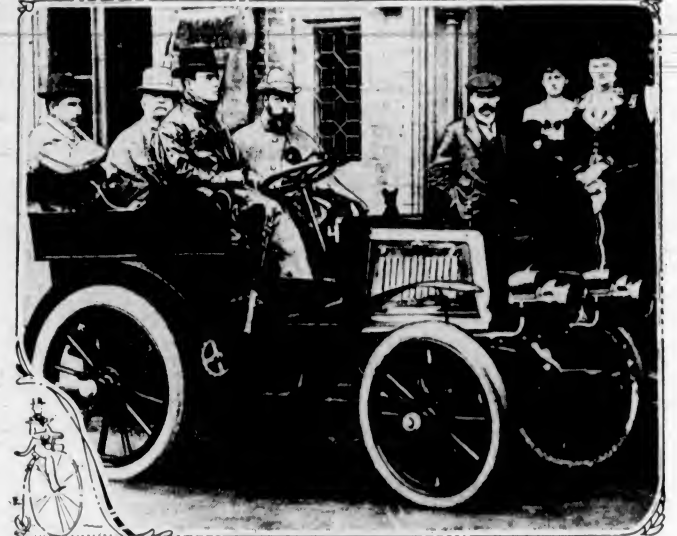

ON THE BATTLEFIELD

A FAMILY REUNION

THE HORSELESS CARRIAGE

King George loved adventure. Here he is shown just before starting out for a ride in one of the earliest motor cars. The driver on this occasion was Hon. C. C. Rolls, of Rolls Royce fame. In the back seat are Sir Charles Guest and Lord Llangatock.

A NAVAL GROUP

This group photograph was taken in 1920, two years after the close of the Great War, and on the occasion of the Prince of Wales' return from Australia. The picture shows the Queen, King George, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of York, the Duke of Gloucester and Princess Mary.

HIS FAVORITE PASTIME

The King was extremely fond of shooting and was at one time considered one of the four best shots in England. Here he is shown shooting from cover and in the open. He was a keen sportsman and did much to popularize this form of sport in the Old Country.

STUDY DRIFT OF CURRENTS

Floating Bottles Used by Commission for Carrying Out Inquiries

SEATTLE, May 4 (AP).—The United States battle fleet, maneuvering in the North Pacific, has no wider range of action than tiny pint-sized drift bottles, on a peaceful mission toward fisheries control.

From Hawaii to the Aleutians and beyond, the chilly Pribilof drift bottles are carried by the ocean's currents.

"Since we began studying the North Pacific currents in this way in 1931, we have used about 5,000 of these drift bottles," Dr. William F. Thompson, director of the International Fisheries Commission, said today.

"We are making important findings on currents, with their effect on carrying halibut eggs and larvae from the spot where they are spawned."

COMMON ON COAST
The finding of tiny glass floats, broken off Japanese fishing nets and carried several thousand miles across the North Pacific by the Kuroshio, or Japanese Current, is common along the Washington and Oregon coasts.

Less known, however, is that the Kuroshio (Japanese for "deep blue"), splits or divides somewhere near the American coast, one branch continuing to the South and West and another arching back up along the British Columbia and Alaska coasts.

"Part of our work," Dr. Thompson explained, "has been to find this split or dividing line, and we've learned that it moves with the seasons, being as far North as the northern tip of Vancouver Island in August, and south of the Columbia River in Winter."

DROPPED OVERBOARD
The drift bottle work has consisted of drifting to sea off the coast in a boat, and then dropping the bottles overboard at intervals of three minutes or so as the boat steamed along a course of possibly 750 miles.

They are weighted with sand, with red paint splatters on the inside to draw attention and carrying a card addressed to the commission with questions as where and when it was found. A small propeller-like device on a wire keeps the bottle in the current, preventing winds from moving it about.

"About 10 per cent of the bottles have been picked up and their cards returned to us," Dr. Thompson said.

MINISTER
"Moses" we are told in Exodus xiv, 13, "rose up, and his minister Joshua."
This is a classically pure use of the word under discussion.
It has also taken on the connotation of agent or instrument, in which latter sense it is mostly used today. That it comes by this significance quite honestly is indicated by the root of minister, which is the Latin minor meaning less.
Logically, the derivative noun acquired the sense it enjoys in various spheres today, including government and religion.
German law today is merely the strictly speaking, minister means enforcement with rubber truncheons assistant, subordinate. By extension, of elastic ordinances.

National Anthem Is Incorrectly Quoted By Many Canadians

Air of "God Save the King" Is Most Widely Sung
Melody—Origin of Tune and Words Is Obscure, and the Latter Are Often Mistakenly Repeated

By REV. DR. J. K. UNSWORTH

MORE millions than usual will this Summer sing "God Save the King," since it is the Silver Jubilee year of the accession of King George V to the throne of the British Empire. And it must be said, a considerable number of the millions will sing it incorrectly. The mighty host of patriots will chant the same tune, and the majestic thunder of their voices rolling from London throughout an Empire on which the sun never sets will be a most moving experience; but, though they be loyal to the tune, many of them will, alas, be disloyal to the words.

It is a venturesome sentence to suggest that the lyrics of the National Anthem are so generally misquoted that they are almost unrecognizable. The writer is of the opinion that fully thirty per cent of Canadians, as any rate, do not repeat accurately the first verse of the National Anthem. He has arrived at this unwelcome conclusion by listening to those around him on various public occasions. Thus, for example, the recent Civic Service in Christ Church Cathedral. He is confirmed in his opinion by the answers given by various social groups to his request to repeat the supposedly familiar words.

To put this matter to the test, the reader is respectfully requested to give voice here and now to his or her patriotic sentiments and repeat out loud the verse under discussion. Then let him compare it with the following lines as found in the Book of Common Prayer of the Church of England:

God save our gracious King,
Long live our noble King,
God save the King.
Send him victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us:
God save the King.

If a poll were taken of such loyal persons as are the Colonist readers, three out of ten would likely be found to have ended the verse with "God save the King" instead of "God save the King." Under the influence of a well-known law of language, "our noble King" and "our noble King" who reigns "over us" have drawn the careless into the mistake of saying "our King" instead of "the King."

ONE VERSE NOT SUNG

That the British National Anthem is still further abused in the house of its friends, the observer will have noted that nobody now sings all of it. One verse is regularly left out. England herself has discarded the second verse. Examine the "Form of Prayer and Thanksgiving," which is to be used on a national scale by Anglicans and Free Churchmen alike, and which was given on yesterday's church page of this paper. The form prescribes that after the Te Deum singing, "the service closes with the singing of the first and third verses of the National Anthem." Here the second verse is definitely taboo. Why?

The inquirer's attention is still further attracted, examining the Canadian edition of the Book of Common Prayer, which was brought out in 1921. The second verse is absent. Canadian Anglicanism has dropped it. So has the United Church in its new hymnary. In fact, whether in the hymn books or not, it is just never sung again. Why?

In fairness to the composer, who over the years has been the subject of much criticism, it is justly pointed out that the verse in question is here reproduced:

O Lord Our God, arise,
Scatter his enemies,
And make them fall:
Confound their politics,
Frustrate their knavish tricks,
On Thee our hopes we fix,
God save us all.

The modern patriot balks at "confound their politics, frustrate their knavish tricks." One must critic, who holds that Dr. John Bull was author, suggests that the now discredited verse re-

SUBSTITUTE OFFERED

How this verse has been received by song is shown in an anonymous letter written in 1921 to the Dean of Worcester Cathedral, who passed it on to The London Times. The unknown correspondent thus delivers his message: "The older I grow the less I feel able to hear it. I think everybody feels nowadays that 'confound their politics, etc.' is unchristian, indecent, disgraceful anywhere, in a church blasphemous, and in a cathedral a blasphemous obscenity." He offers the following as substitute:

O Lord Our God, arise,
All our salvation lies
In Thy great hand;
Centre his thought on Thee,
Let him God's captain be
Thine to eternally
God save the King.

This stanza has not been adopted and not likely to be. Well, memorized as is the first verse—barring the last line, as mentioned above—it is probable that only a minority would pass 100 per cent on the third verse—speaking now of Canadian audiences. To refresh their memory here it is:

Thy choicest gifts in store
On him be pleased to pour;
Long may he reign:
May he defend our laws,
And ever give us cause
To sing with heart and voice
God save the King.

This is the second verse in the Canadian Anglican Book of Prayer, which completes the triplet by adding the following verse:

Our loved Dominion bless
With peace and happiness
From shore to shore;
And let our Empire be
United, loyal, free,
True to herself and Thee
For evermore.

AUTHORSHIP DISPUTED
Widely used as is the National Anthem—and no melody in the world is as much sung as the tune of "God Save the King"—and deeply ingrained in the universal British heart, it is singular that origin of both verse and air is uncertain. Both musical and literary authorities disagree as to the author and the date.

Here is the interesting fact that humanity's most popular melody has no assured pedigree.

The writer of this article will not run the risk of getting his fingers burnt by discussing this question. But he has read what the Encyclopedia Britannica has to say and all that the local Public Library could offer. Whether the father of it was Henry Carey in 1740, or Dr. John Bull in 1610, or James Oswald in 1742, no opinion is here passed. As to the tune, a writer in The Musical Quarterly, of July, 1924, gives the air a far-off and honorable ancestry in a Gregorian antiphon of the eighth century.

What stands out in any study of the tune of the anthem is its popularity. In the eighteenth century it was wedded, and still is, to Denmark's "Heil dir, dem Liebenkönig," and at that period was sung in Sweden. In 1790, Prussia, adapted the air to the words, "Heil dir in Siegertranz" (Hail to thee, with victory crowned), with the result that during the Great War the same tune was heard at times on both sides of no-man's-land. Russia used it until 1833. In 1832 it crossed the Atlantic and was sung then, and is now, to "My country, 'tis of thee," composed by Samuel P. Smith, Switzerland sings her "Rufi du, men Vaterland" to the self-same music. Indeed, it is stated that at the year 1914 the bands of full twenty countries played the historic melody as the national air.

Millions upon millions will sing this anthem during the coming days. In it they will express their appreciation of a truly noble King and their loyalty to the democratic ideals promoted through his tactful and unselfish kingship.

The world-wide British voice, be it noted, is reverent. The first word of the National Anthem, like the first sentence of the Bible, speaks of God.

Germany, United States of America and Britain are all historically devout. Without making sharp comparisons, it is significant of the native religiousness of the British people, that while Prussia's National Anthem glorified the Fatherland, and Americans sing "My country, 'tis of thee," the British, using the same melody, placed the Divine Name at the forefront and for centuries have prayed, as they still pray, "God save the King."

OLD BOATHOUSES TO BE REMOVED

Old boathouses, which now mar the beauty of the Inner Harbor on the north side, shortly will be removed and a large float built to replace the tumbled-down floating boathouses now there. This improvement has been made possible through an arrangement made by a special committee of the council with H. Peachy.

ORGANIC AND FUNCTIONAL MENTAL AILMENTS

Among the difficulties about mental symptoms is to decide which are due to some real trouble with the brain or nervous system, and which are due to circumstances, mode of bringing up by the parents, simple nervousness, or other causes not organic, or functional, as they are called.

Dr. George Riddock, in The British Medical Journal, points out that there are certain symptoms that are easily recognized as due to real or organic trouble in the brain or nervous system. For instance, sudden diplopia (double vision) or misty vision in one eye, ought to make one suspect organic trouble.

Certain other symptoms are always a sign of organic trouble such as difficulty in speaking or in swallowing, "the continuous sideways moving or rolling of the eyeballs, alterations in the electrical reactions of the eye muscles, inequality of the abdominal reflexes and other definite symptoms.

"On the other hand, the history of a psychoneurotic, that is, the patient without true organic mental trouble, almost always shows a tendency from childhood onward to face trouble badly. In fact, the neurotic or psychoneurotic is a person who is unable to strike a bargain with existence."

These patients have always dodged responsibility, want to play games their own way or they won't play, think they are being unjustly dealt with or persecuted.

However, Dr. Riddock warns his fellow physicians that sometimes organic or inorganic symptoms are so closely related that it would be unwise to call a patient a neurotic or psychoneurotic (that is, as having no real mental ailments) without considering his whole make-up and circumstances.

While the close consideration of the signs and symptoms is of the utmost value, the investigation of the behavior of the individual as a whole, in the past as in the present, will really determine whether the trouble is or is not organic. Generally speaking, an individual will not change his behavior suddenly unless there is organic trouble, but it is now known infected teeth, tonsils or intestine can cause a decided change in behavior. It is well to remember also that an individual who is a neurotic (no organic trouble) may develop organic troubles just like other people, and also a person may become mentally unstable as a result of anxiety about illness of any kind which attacks him.

During the past week three substantial houses for Oak Bay have been planned and permits issued for their erection. The total value of the three residences is $16,350.

A permit in the name of Grace Willis has been issued for an eight-roomed home at 650 Mountjoy Avenue. The contractors are McCullough & Harvey.

At 648 Falkland Road, C. Savage is to erect a house consisting of five rooms and estimated to cost $3,150. W. Gaskill is the builder.

VANCOUVER BREWERIES, LTD. PLANT

Twenty-five years ago the Vancouver Breweries, Limited, started operations in a modest way in their new Kitilano home. The original brewery started in Nanaimo in 1883, moving to Vancouver in the early part of the century, operating at Kingsway and Main until 1910.

From the very beginning the small personnel, backed by their many years of brewing experience, gave every effort to produce a lager beer that was destined to earn the title of "Canada's Finest." The most modern equipment was added as additional units were built. Men from the world's best brewing houses were sought to give advice on the secret of making fine lager. The result was inevitable.

Today the Vancouver Breweries, Limited, is the largest in Western Canada, with storage capacity for ageing purposes of over 30,000 barrels. The Vancouver Breweries are one of British Columbia's large payrolls with over $150,000 paid out annually. A multitude of British Columbia products are purchased—malt, hops, rice, water, fuel, labels, crowns, wrappers, cartons, sacks, cooperage and many other items. In fact, over one-half million dollars is spent annually among British Columbia firms.

The Vancouver Breweries pay over $15,000 in licences and land taxes besides many other items amounting to thousands of dollars.

Pilsener Lager, the largest selling beer in British Columbia, was the result of painstaking effort year after year. To celebrate the Silver Jubilee, the Vancouver Breweries, Limited, made plans last Fall to give to the people of British Columbia the finest brew that had ever borne the Pilsener label. This specially brewed Pilsener Silver Jubilee brew has been ageing for the past six months, and is now offered to the public in token of the appreciation of its makers for the generous patronage of British Columbia which has made possible the quarter century of progress.

KING GEORGE "ON BOARD"

By C. Ramsdon Hall

OUTSTANDING among living yachtsmen is His Majesty the King, and outstanding among yachts is King George's cutter, Britannia. She has more racing victories to her credit than any other yacht in history. In 1930 she won her 200th race with His Majesty on board, and sailed by Sir Philip Hunkle.

She is, indeed, a fortunate boat. She has had two lives. Her career began in 1893, when she was built for the late King Edward, then Prince of Wales. That year was the memorable in yachting history. The Prince had been laid down for the avowed purpose of achieving a victory in a yachting campaign and carrying of to America as many trophies as possible. Great Britain was not slow to gather her forces to defend. Britannia was one of the newest and most up-to-date of yachts, ever ready to look to her to maintain British traditions, and the public was not disappointed. In the race for the Royal Victoria Cup, off Cape Ann, she was defeated, but over the cross-channel course she was unexpectedly victorious. She beat Britannia to Chelbourg and back in a gale of wind.

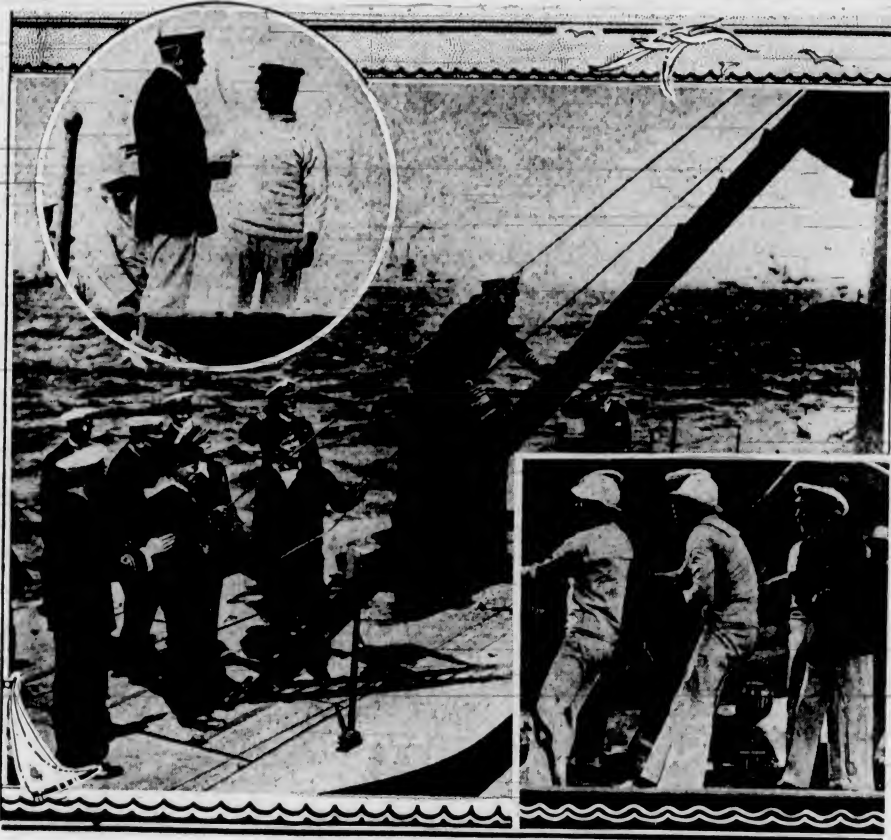

The principal yachts of those days, Britannia, Navahoe, Valkyrie, Vigilant, were capable of some ten knots in a wind. The clipper-hull of Britannia was something of an innovation, pictures of her cutting water were published, but the older generation of yachtsmen looked askance and shook their heads. These fears were not justified by the event, and Britannia proved to be a winner among yachts.

Kept Up to Date

WHEN built she was the last word, and since then the King has had her brought up to date as required. Not merely was every attention given to her sailing qualities, but the fittings, were models of light structure, taste and comfort. Polished yellow pine and mahogany were used for the woodwork and tapestries hung above the dials. These are for guests' sleeping cabins—roomy saloon, a cabin for the captain and accommodation for her crew of thirty.

In 1897 King Edward sold Britannia. He had had her for four years. She passed out of yachting history until 1899, when he bought her back and raced her again. Then, in 1900, he disposed of her to Sir Richard Williams-Bartley, who sold her back to King Edward in 1902. Ever since then she has been a royal yacht.

She has become a ship very dear to King George. He himself is a sailor born and bred, his chosen career in the navy, and at an early age he "took to" the sea as Britain's sons have done for centuries. While still a naval cadet he figured prominently in regattas. His Majesty "took to" Britannia in the same way. He would not have any other yacht as a gift. For him there is no ship quite like her. Frequently he sails her himself, for he holds a master's certificate, and at others he will "hang and haul" with his crew.

KING GEORGE V IS AN ENTHUSIASTIC YACHTSMAN

It was a very popular decision when, after the end of the war, the King made up his mind to race her again in 1920, and the "old lady" well justified His Majesty's affection for her. Though no longer the last word in yachts, she was as smart as a new ship to be proud of when she came out again.

A Truly Royal Sport

THE King has given great enjoyment to yachting of late years. He has made it a truly royal sport, and Britannia has shown that she can more than hold her own against modern yachts. The latter usually have a greater freeboard, which enables them to develop higher speeds in a fresh wind. They are slightly more rugged, and therefore more easily driven in a light wind. But Britannia has won many races against these newcomers, and she is not afraid of a heavy sea but flourishes in the more uncertain weather which often prevails round Britain's coasts. In fact, the King usually defeats other yachts in what has come to be known among sailors as "Britannia's weather."

Britannia is usually sailed by His Majesty's groom-in-waiting, Major Sir Philip Hunkle, under whose command the King places himself when on board. But King George himself has earned and holds the master's certificate, and is no mean hand at the helm. He has sailed her himself with victory more than once, and the years do not seem to have diminished his agility as the boom comes over.

In the nature of things few people have been privileged to crouch with His Majesty on the heeling deck as the yacht comes round. But many have experienced that little thrill which suddenly catches the heart when the yacht moves up towards the starting line and a whisper goes round "the King on board."

The rig of the Britannia has been altered five times. She had at first what was known as a cutter rig. In 1928 a Marconi or one yard topsail was provided. She has now been fitted with the Bermuda rig, and a new mast was installed in 1931.

Alterations will not stop here. The King takes a living interest in his yacht. He follows every development of the sport closely, and now by his instructions the lessons of the contest between Endeavour and Labrador are to be applied to Britannia.

Has Copper Bottom

SHE is the only racing yacht which still has a copper sheathed bottom. For the first time in her career this copper is to be renewed, and she is to be given a new painted wooden bottom in the modern type. This will reduce her weight and remove the friction which arises from the old brass and the plate edges which are liable to lift. They will not be any other Johnson bottom.

Her new copper will be silvered, and the old brass will appear in a new look. She will be equipped with headsails similar to the cutter's, and after supports appropriate to the rig. The new rig will be a Marconi. Mr. Shaw has designed what is called a "quadrilateral double-headed" rig for Britannia. This will be a success. It has been chosen to other yachts with a like result, and now Britannia is to be fitted with one. It is a large four-sided sail, taking the place of the old triangular sail and the result, and is the same size as the two of them together.

With an all-up like Britannia this raises some new problems as to whether the ship's mast and after supports are strong enough to stand the strain. If they can, then there is to be a considerable addition to the mainmast to the speed of the yacht.

Mr. Shaw, Mr. Nicholson, of Gosport, are undertaking the alterations that designs of Mr. Charles Nicholson, and it is expected that when they are completed Britannia will be able to do a close race with yachts of the 17 days. His Majesty's keenness for the sport goes into modernized with the year. The changes in the yacht mean that we shall see her in 1935 this year in pursuit of his favourite amusement. Let us hope his Jubilee will be crowned with a win when the King himself is at the helm.

Winters at Cowes

In 1896 Britannia came to an anchor in the early summer, and has since then been in the hands of the King. Early in the King's reign she was kept in person at Cowes, but he has now left her to the Clyde and East Coast regattas.

One who has sailed her described her as "handy and lively as a kitten," the ideal yacht to sail for a sailor King.

Cowes Week is the scene of the King's great sport. He takes part in it, and on Friday, Cape Day, by passing a button on the royal yacht, he fires a salvo of rockets, which is the signal for all the illuminations, both on shore and in other vessels, to appear as it may.

Britannia in her forty-third year, a fine old age for a yacht, but with her new sail and painted bottom she may win for her Royal owner many more races yet. Let us hope she celebrates His Majesty's Jubilee with another year like 1893.

Leaders in British Politics When King Came to the Throne

NATURALLY enough, many great figures of the Lords and Commons who surrounded the King's throne in the year of his accession have now passed out of life. On the other hand, quite a few remain with seemingly little of their natural force abated.

In 1910, H. H. Asquith (later the Earl of Oxford and Asquith), one of the last survivors of the Gladstonian epoch, was at the head of the Liberal Ministry. The election of that year—the last election to be held until after the close of the war, nine years later—returned 275 Liberals, forty Labor members, eighty-two Irish Nationalists and 273 Conservatives or Unionists.

David George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, was the top of the list in the Liberal ranks. He was a man of great force and energy, who had well-nigh brought down the walls of the second chamber upon their contents when they had rejected the Lloyd George budget. That impersonal figure, Sir David Lloyd George, was at the Foreign Office, aloof from the general public but at the same time already filled with foreboding on the way matters were shaping in Europe. Winston Churchill was conducting affairs at the Home Office with a liveliness calculated to disturb the permanent officials.

The "Battle of Sidney Street" was to take place within a few months of the opening of the new reign. Several foreign desperadoes, who had killed more than one policeman when frustrated in an attempt to break into a jeweller's store in the city, barricaded themselves in a small house in Sidney Street in the East End. A force of Scots-Guards was sent from the Tower to attempt to dislodge them by sniping at the windows. Mr. Churchill, who as Home Secretary was responsible for maintaining law and order, took a taxi to the scene, and was "snapped" by press photographers as he peered at the sharpshooters from a railway arch. Winston later repudiated a suggestion that he went to Sidney Street to command operations, but he confessed it would have been better if he had stayed away altogether.

Busy With Defence

R. B. HAVDANE, later Lord Halifax, was at the War Office, deeply engaged with perfecting his scheme for remaking the British military land-marching, whereby the Territorial Force should become an effective second line of defence and reinforcement for the regular army. Reginald McKenna, now chairman of the Mullard Bank and one of the greatest powers in the world of high finance, was at the Admiralty. Lord Loughborough—John Reid as he was affectionately known to the British—was Lord Chancellor, but was already failing. John (later Viscount) Morley was at the India Office, and Lord Aberdare, sometime Governor-General of Canada, was Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

At Lambeth Palace was Dr. Randall Davidson. For years he had been understood by the people at large, the then Archbishop of Canterbury, before the close of his long life was hailed generally as one of the wisest of His Majesty's advisers, and as the most valuable person in the Empire at large ever to put on episcopal gaiters or any other kind of habilliment.

Dr. Gordon Lang, recently promoted from Bishop Suffragan of Stirling in the London Diocese, had been elevated to the northern and southern provinces as Archbishop of York and Dr. William Inge, seated at the

Changes in Leadership

AMONG prominent personalities who could not be accounted officially at least among His Majesty's advisers at the period around the opening of his reign was A. J. Rathbone, Lord Rathbone. A member of politics, a great intellect, and allied closely to the historic House of Lords, Mr. Rathbone, through a great variety of causes, found the leadership of the Conservative Opposition a leadership which he had enjoyed since the retirement of his uncle, the Marquis of Salisbury, steadily slipping from him. Less than a year later Mr. Rathbone was replaced by the Canadian-born, Bonar Law, although not a few Conservatives would have preferred Asquith (later Sir Arthur) to him, or Walter (later Lord) Long.

It was at the opening of the Parliament which assembled a few months before King George's accession that Joseph Chamberlain made his last appearance in the House which he had so long adorned and where he gained such brilliant triumphs. The final entrance of the great statesman, wrecked with mortal sickness, provided a most touching note. Not until the hopeless nature of his illness had become known had people realized that he was in his seventy-fifth year. His vigorous vitality up to the time he was stricken grieved people to forget that he was already a man of forty when, in 1874, he first went to Westminster after a strenuous municipal career in Birmingham.

Leaders Coming On

At the opening of the present reign Ramsay MacDonald, now Prime Minister in the National Government, and earlier Prime Minister in two Labor Governments, was Labor M.P. for Leicester and secretary of the party. "Jim" Thomas, political association with Derby, the great railway centre, started almost simultaneously with the coming of King George to the throne, for he was elected for the borough in January, 1910, and has held the seat ever since.

In Coronation Year, Mr. Thomas, as secretary, led the principal railway workers' strike, which was broken by the railway strike of that year. The strike lasted that time for only a week end, and was settled mainly through the mediation of Lord George. There was no lasting peace in the railway world of Britain, however, until after another year later. Arthur Henderson had been in the Commons for seven years when the reign of King George had been by way of a bye-election in the Barnard Castle Division of Durham, an election notable as being the first victory gained by Labor without the help of Liberal votes.

One of the most colorful of characters among the Liberals at the opening of the reign was Lord Curzon, M.P. for Wootton Bassett. He was for among the people he represented in Parliament a real lion something of a prototype of George Lansbury. Curzon, in 1910, was elected an extraordinary gift of rugged courage. Mr. Lansbury had been elected in 1910. He was the first of the new generation of Labor without the help of Liberal votes.

made on this subject around this time led to his enduring a rest in jail.

Sir John Simon's speeches in the House at the opening of the reign were delivered with a precision of thought and grasp of fact which clearly marked him out for high office, and it was only fitting that he should fill the office of Solicitor-General. T. E. Smith, afterwards Lord Birkenhead, was helmsman of the Government with an audacity that was the delight of the Tory Opposition.

Interesting Figures

STANLEY Baldwin had been an M.P. only for a couple of years, and although never desiring to thrust himself forward, was listened to with extreme attention when he discussed the position of masters and men in the heavy industries. In one of his early speeches Mr. Baldwin stated that his family had been in trade for 130 years, yet the number of disputes they had had with their work-people could be counted on the fingers of one hand.

Among the more interesting of the lesser lights in and around Westminster and Whitehall in the pre-war years of the reign were Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, who brought the breeziness of the salt sea into the stuffy atmosphere of the Commons. Augustine Birrell, justly appreciated as a light essayist, but who came to grief as a Minister of the Crown over the sexual question of religious education in the schools, and later as Irish Secretary found his public career ended for good with the Dublin Rebellion of Easter, 1916; John Burns, the old-time champion of the dock laborers, whose appointment to the Local Government Board (now Ministry of Health) was a democratic touch which was hardly expected of Mr. Asquith.

John Burns, like John Morley, left the Cabinet on the declaration of war, and his name has never been heard again in association with public appointment. Today, at 76, he still wears the familiar reefers jacket, looks as sturdy as ever, and is to be encountered most mornings in the National Liberal Club among a circle of smoke-room gossipers.

Was Injured in War

KING George was wounded in the war—wounded so badly that the Queen was empowered to take over many of his official duties.

In 1915, while inspecting massed troops in France, the King's horse, a mare belonging to Sir Douglas Haig, reared at the sound of the drums, slipped and threw the King to the ground. He was painfully injured and was rushed home to England in a hospital train.

It was typical of the monarch that he asked no special favors on this journey. Though suffering considerably, it is related that a private in the cot next to him received a military medal from the royal hands, and it was during the journey home that Sergeant Oliver Brooks was decorated by the King with the Victoria Cross. The King attempted to pin it on the sergeant's tunic, but was overcome with weakness before he could complete the task.

Both King George and Queen Mary gave up every luxury, every expense attached to their office. The King even gave up drinking spirits in order to set an example to his people who, in the heat of the war fever, were said to be drinking too heavily. Both worked strenuously in war work. Nothing was too much to ask of them. From dawn till midnight they kept going.

Eight women living in the New Grassland village have gained the total age of 664 years between them.

Coronation Oath Has Been Changed

IN the twelve months which lay between King George's accession and coronation effective steps were taken to reduce him to a figure in the coronation service which had been extremely prominent in King Edward's reign. The coronation service, which was a mixture of religion with politics, and was well aware that the influence of such sentences would give place to millions of his subjects, and all of them in any manner of a particular religious persuasion.

Lack of time and other difficulties prevented the coronation of King George with the matter before King Edward was crowned. His Majesty resolved the difficulty in part by letting it be known as which was possible to be remitted the work was to be done, and by altering them at the coronation a year or two as he might.

Queen Mary Holds Love of Loyal Subjects

It has taken the people of the British Empire about twenty years to learn to know their Queen. In part, this is due to the natural reserve of Her Most Excellent Majesty.

In early childhood, the lovely Princess Mary, brought up in a home where the hand gloved in velvet dispensed an iron rule, was always a shy girl. This shyness or reserve, remained with her through her life as Duchess of York and Princess of Wales. When she became Queen, the British people knew little of her beyond the formal details of her life and training. They did not know Queen Mary the woman.

Back of this reserve, which often gave the impression of austerity and an overdone sense of duty, there lies a very human person—one who is sensitive enough to understand things from both sides and who can remain human and still be conscious of her position.

Queen Mary has always felt that maternity was woman's highest achievement, and the task of mothering six children was one that she did not take lightly, but sacrificed much in order to see that they were given the best of training. As a result, her five famous sons and the Countess of Hallowood, her daughter, worshipped their mother, sometimes stern though she may have been.

It has often been chronicled that the Queen has done more for the British people than any woman in the Empire. Charitable to an extreme, yet ever desirous of remaining in the background, there are hundreds of organizations, and individuals who receive donations from "Queen Mary's" made known even to them.

Only now as the Queen grows old gracefully and graciously take will be sixty-eight this month, is the gap between the Queen and the people being bridged. To those who did not understand her reserve and dignity, always in evidence, was misconstrued as coldness. Nothing could be farther from the truth. Down through the years her high ideals and principles have been retained and gradually made known as an example to be followed.

It has taken the people of the British Empire about twenty years to learn to know their Queen. In part, this is due to the natural reserve of Her Most Excellent Majesty.

ENGLAND'S POPULAR PRINCE

By Thomas T. Champion

LONDON—Of the Prince of Wales it was recently written: "H.R.H. lives twenty-four hours a day, and more sentimental twaddle has been written about him than about any other person with the possible exception of his niece, Princess Elizabeth."

It is certainly more true that the Prince's obvious mental reaction to his august position is that it has always restricted his personal freedom, and that he is consequently often compelled to encounter an artificiality and a lack of spontaneity in the bearing of those of any degree with whom he is brought into contact.

Of the Prince's youthful training he cannot help but have cruel remembrances. "As a kid it was the very devil," he once confessed. However, he was lucky in one thing, for from the very first both his father, King George, and his grandfather, King Edward, were as one in resolving that his upbringing should be very different from that endured by King Edward. In the latter's case social historians have recorded their wonderment that, in view of the fussy devotion of Queen Victoria and her husband, the Prince Consort, to the upbringing of their children, King Edward and his brothers and sisters failed to turn out anything like the first order.

For sixteen years of age the present Prince of Wales led the ordinary life of a child of comfortably circumstanced parents. Almost his only glimpses of royal pomp in those days was when he used to be held from the garden wall of Marlborough House the changing of the guard at St. James' Palace across the way. It was from this very place, within a few months of his seventh birthday, that he heard the proclamation by the heralds of the accession of King Edward VII. In those tender years it was from his father and mother that he gathered his first impressions of the gravity of public duty. In those years, too, he found pleasure in the company of his kindly grandfather, from whom he doubtless received many a hint towards pretty manners.

Education of Heir

NEXT to his father and mother and his grandfather the formative influences in the young Prince's life were provided mainly by his tutor, H. P. Hansell, previously assisting master at the famous Rossall School, on the Lancashire coast. Hansell's tutelage went well beyond the realm of mere book learning, for he taught the Prince what was good of "the English public school tradition," the willingness to take the rough with the smooth cheerfully, to work well and play well, and to shun a conceit of one's own self. When the Prince went to the naval college at Osborne, Isle of Wight, Mr. Hansell went with him. With this exception, the training given the Prince at Osborne, and also later at the naval "finishing school" at Dartmouth, was the same as given any other cadet.

Nevertheless, the restrictions of the Prince's station pursued him. He could never have the schoolboy luxury, for instance, of telling another fellow that his face made him tired, or "blushing him out" as he became too "flashed" by the glare of the sun. He was in close touch with his grandfather, H.R.H. was not a privileged spectator or ornament of the "gilded staff" period, but a hard working officer in intimate touch with all the crude facts of sacrifice and effort.

In the academic sense, it is unlikely that residence at Oxford influenced the Prince's character to any marked degree; on the other hand, the comparative freedom of the life here gave him generous opportunities for expanding his natural taste for sport. Soccer he played over more than one season in Magdalen's second eleven, but it was polo and hunting which really captured his imagination. In his university days, too, the Prince acquired his first practical experience of soldiering, becoming a full-blown member of the University Officers' Training Corps, and during the annual training facing the pole of a hill tent at night with five other comrades. Oxford, though it perhaps did little for him in the profundities of thought and learning, undoubtedly developed his self-reliance and extended his perspective.

Service in War

THE Great War broke out while he was at the university, and there was some talk of his joining the navy. Here, again, his position as heir apparent obtruded itself. As heir apparent on board a ship of war he would be at the mercy of any German submarine. The same haunting obstacle was urged when he earnestly desired to go as an ordinary subaltern of the Canadian forces to France. "I am not so much disturbed at the prospect of your getting killed," Lord Kitchener told him, "as I am disturbed at the prospect of your getting taken prisoner."

Soon after this the Prince ran up against a senior subaltern who was prevented from having been on "fatigue" for three days successively. "I seem to spend my life in supervising," grumbled the senior subaltern. "You're damn lucky," retorted his royal junior, "I've spent all my life in being supervised." Denied permission to proceed to France, the Prince for once forsook his code of conduct to ask no favors. He never rested till he was allowed to become a member of G.H.Q. staff. All the same, it was a bitter disappointment that he had not gone to the war as a regimental officer.

It would be overpainting the picture to say there was anything phenomenal in his service in France. As A.D.C., however, to General French he had the unusual advantage of seeing very much more of the war than millions of other serving soldiers, for he naturally accompanied the Commander in Chief all over the line and beheld every phase of operations. With the exception of a period on the Italian front, and a short trip of inspection to Egypt and the Sudan, the Prince remained with the British in France until the close of the war. Other who was in close touch with his grandfather, H.R.H. was not a privileged spectator or ornament of the "gilded staff" period, but a hard working officer in intimate touch with all the crude facts of sacrifice and effort.

Popular Personality

THE Prince, at the close of the war, was little known to the public at large even at home. In the few years following he became easily the most popular personage in the English-speaking world. His debut as Ambassador in the United States, his brilliant and the secret of his program, made it impossible for him to receive any popular welcome at Washington. It was the Prince himself who insisted that at New York all his mystic and discretion should be dropped, and his smile, reinforced with his cheery wave was in 1927. The following year he went on a hunting trip to East Africa, but hurried home on news of the King's grave illness, and finished his East African hunting trip two years later. His last big animal shot was in 1932, when he visited the Argentine and made an attempt to hunt big game. His travels have been to the Argentine, Brazil, Chile, Cuba, the Hawaiian Islands, India, Japan, the Philippines, the United States, and the West Indies.

Selling Empire Idea

WHICH brings us to the role the Prince has played as Ambassador of Empire. Seen right over all see Canada for your services, was his explanation to British business men at the Mansion House, following one of his Canadian tours. On another occasion he asked the idea of business men were fully persuaded that their selling methods were inferior to his. "I am asking this question tonight," continued the Prince naively, "because I am very interested, as I have never tried to sell anything to my countrymen. I am a few times. Resolving his serious tone he added to the somewhat sad state of affairs, "I had sometimes encountered in his wide travels, of a British community thus induced into away anxious to have British goods but unable to do so because they were either unable to pay or unable to locate the goods."

In regard to the domestic welfare of the United Kingdom, the Prince's interest of late has been devoted to the home of the industrial classes. His exhortations have not only contained passages of almost burning indignation, but he has also set a considerable example towards a better state of things in the re-arranging of his own property on the Duke of Cornwall estate of Kensington, South London. On his desire for the welfare of the youth of the nation striking proof has been afforded within the last few weeks, when the Prince submitted a scheme for celebrating the jubilee by making substantial provision for the care of adolescents. The Prince's visits to the slum districts of areas of England and Wales, during the years of depression were stimulating in more than one sense. Further evidence of the heir apparent's resolve to study things at close quarters is evinced almost every week when he is not out of England. It is stating the obvious fact to say that in social work and service he finds his greatest recreation. It was recently written of him, "There is less than nothing of 'politeness' in his perpetual visits to East End slums, and in his zeal for the British Legion and kindred institutions. He goes to all such functions because they genuinely interest him."

"What of his life?" continues the same writer. "There can be none harder to live, no future more difficult to prepare for, less easy to contemplate. All too many of the secrets of human existence reach him at last state and diluted. As the years go on, the isolation both of his position in the civilized world and of his personal life is likely to increase. It is improbable that any man at heart enjoys his job. But his destiny is as cruel as the best possible chance of success in his hands."

and all the influences of comradeship on a battlefield. He had spent six months with a platoon of the Grenadier Guards in a contested trench, and some home with one arm, he would have been a more obvious example of typical experience, and more pleased with himself. But he might easily have been a less complete participant.

of Empire was in August, 1919, when he made his first visit to Canada. The Prince's extension of this visit to the United States was at first regarded with some little apprehension at home. According to an English critic at that time, the question of who had won the war was a strange relation. "The strict police supervision maintained of the hand, as he passed through the streets, won a complete victory."

The following year the Prince visited Australia and New Zealand, and in the years immediately after, he visited India, South Africa, South America, with two other visits to Canada and one other summer in the United States. His fourth visit to Canada

His Majesty Always a Keen Businessman

IN addition to being a naval officer, an army commander, an expert on things artistic—in general, apart from being a king, the Sovereign of the British Empire has to be a businessman.

And a clever businessman is King George—the keen clever one, in the secret that means wise and careful. When the King comes down to his study about eight o'clock each morning, he finds there laid out, telegrams, morning papers, state communications, etc., which demand immediate attention. He looks them over carefully before breakfast, which he has at nine thirty. Often the King and Queen breakfast together, sometimes other members of the Royal Family are home, and the talk is the usual "family stuff," with no suggestion of discussing affairs of state.

Breakfast over, the King then confers with Sir Philip Wigram, his private secretary and personal adviser. After going over the correspondence with him, he is then advised of callers, requesting each time a short summary of the visitor's career.

Quite often the King surprises his visitor with his knowledge of their own affairs. He is a most charming host, and, as one officer puts it, "Whether His Majesty is receiving his first or twenty-fifth caller, it makes no difference." He never allows the interest to flag.

Often the King spends the afternoon in session with government or police officials whom he has called to advise him on certain matters.

In all, practically the entire day is taken up with the business of being a businessman—and that he is a capable one is shown by his successful reign of twenty-five years, from May 6, 1910, to May 6, 1935. Long May He Reign!

King Is Fond of Sport

WHEN King George ascended the throne, there were many who thought that he would dampen the ardor of royal sports—the royal stables in particular. King Edward had always been a lover of horse-racing, while King George had never shown much liking for it. But when he became King, he astonished everyone by his knowledge of horseflesh. He was a better judge than his father.

But horse-racing is not the King's favorite sport. There are two others that take up more of his time. The King is an expert marksman, and a genuine sportsman. On his Scottish estates he is a favorite pastime. Yachting at Cowes is another real attraction for His Majesty, and there is nothing he likes more than to climb aboard the royal yacht Britannia for a sail in a sparkling breeze.

King George never had the luck with horses that his father, King Edward, had. Always some unforeseen mishap marred what seemed to be a splendid opportunity. But this lack of success never worried the King much. He liked sports—just like the Prince of Wales today—for sport's sake, not for any desire to gamble or win.

Her Majesty, Queen Mary

IN some ways Queen Mary possesses the characteristics of Queen Victoria. Although her position in the realm obviously differs from her mother's, she commands authority, nevertheless, if Queen Mary has lacked something in direct authority, she has perhaps gained more by her moral and sentimental power of appeal.

The one thing in early life, in middle age, and now in her more elderly years, Queen Mary has always possessed "a presence." Nobody could assert that Queen Victoria's personal appearance was commanding. It was once wisely said, however, of Queen Victoria that she was "essentially a middle-class woman." The same, too, may be said of Queen Mary. Considering their station, her parents, the Duke and Duchess of Teck, were far from well equipped with the world's goods, and the future Queen Consort consequently learned at an early age a knowledge Empire ever since the day in 1893 when she was married in the little chapel at St. James'. If anyone intimately associated with Her Majesty at the present day were asked to name the Queen's favorite pastime, probably the answer, starting though it might appear, would be, shopping. Queen Mary's excursions in this respect are varied. Every time the British Industries Fair is held at some town or three, she goes to Glasgow and the Albert City with the most valuable relic, among the displays here, there and everywhere. When at Sandringham she constantly drives out to the little towns of East Anglia, there to purchase some little store of her own, a small, small and inconspicuous, but well known to Her Majesty through previous experience.

The athletic girl who, as so prominent in the present era had hardly come into existence when the Queen was young, and Her of the economic possibilities of one pound sterling.

Her Majesty's diffidence in public, which was patent during her years as Duchess of York and as Princess of Wales, doubtless arose in part through constant association with the commanding personality and gifts of her mother. Quite possibly, too, in her early married life, she was inclined to be awed by the imperious oversight of Queen Victoria, who was a ruler in the full sense of the Royal Family, even unto the third and fourth generations.

Queen's Charities

TO attempt a narration of Queen Mary's three and varied range of activities in the cause of charity in its widest sense would be wearisome. Her example in this respect has been an inspiration to the womanhood of the Majesty has never displayed a pronounced interest in sport of any kind. All the same, she seems to enjoy an afternoon at Wimbledon watching the play on the Centre Court. Probably it is a matter of social duty rather than of preference that she almost invariably accompanies the King to Epsom or to Ascot.

In one respect the King and Queen are content to go their different ways. The King loves the water and is never happier than when helping to sail Britannia. The Queen, on the other hand, is no sailor. When Cowes Week comes round and the King is aboard Britannia, the Queen simply lets her time mostly on the first land of the life of Wales.

Music and Theatre

COMPETENT critics have often remarked with all the respect due to the absence of any marked musical ability in the last two generations of the Royal Family. Perhaps this opinion will be qualified now that the Prince of Wales has composed a tune for the bagpipes. Queen Mary, at any rate, has never professed a critical appreciation of the higher forms of music. Like the King, she is fond of an occasional evening at the theatre.

In this connection it is interesting to note that, outside of the royal courts and an occasional state occasion, the British Sovereign and his Consort have practically no official engagements. Her Majesty, it may be added, has never been known once to appear in the hunting field, although her only daughter, the Countess of Harewood, has always been a keen rider to hounds, while the Earl of Harewood is a Hunt Master.

Only twice so far has Queen Mary spoken over the radio. The first occasion was when she invited a musical to be performed on Tower Hill, and the second occasion was at the home of Lord Islay, some months ago, of the great passenger liner named after her.

Rules Are Issued for the Jubilee Medal

INSTRUCTIONS have been issued concerning the wearing of the King's Jubilee Medal, 80,000 of which have been struck for issue as a personal souvenir from His Majesty to persons in government service and others in the United Kingdom and other parts of the Empire.

The medal has been designed by Sir William Goscombe John, R.A. On the obverse are depicted the King and Queen, crowned and holding hands. To the left, with the inscription "GEORGE V. and QUEEN MARY, MAY VI. MCMLXXXV." On the reverse is the Royal Cypher G.R.I., surrounded by the words "JUBILEE 1902-1935." The medal will be worn suspended by a ribbon from the neck, and will be worn on the left breast after all Jubilee, Coronation, and Empire medals. The following are the rules for the wearing of the medal: Women who have no other decorations or medals will wear the Jubilee Medal on the left shoulder of the dress, the ribbon in this case being in the form of a bow. Women who are already in possession of official medals worn on a bar will wear the Jubilee Medal on the right shoulder. It is also stated that, consequently, many decorated medals of various origin which may be worn on the occasion of the Jubilee should not be worn in such a manner that they might be confused with the Jubilee Medal by the King.

King's Visits to Canada

CANADA welcomed King George and Queen Mary in 1901, when, as the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall, they traversed the Dominion from Quebec to Victoria and back to Halifax, in the course of an Empire Tour projected before the death of Queen Victoria in January of that year, the plans marked by her enthusiastic approval.

The King, as Prince of Wales, attended the territorial celebrations at Quebec in 1901. On this occasion he came on the British battleship "Indomitable," then the world's greatest fighting ship. But as Prince George, a young midshipman of H.M.S. Canada of the North American and West Indies Squadron, he had his first glimpses of the Dominion in the early eighties.

Since his accession to the throne the King has been unable to revisit Canada, but he has never missed an opportunity of showing his personal interest in the welfare of the Dominion with which he became intimately acquainted as heir apparent. And the Royal Family has carried on and deepened the personal contact with the Dominion through the various visits of the present Prince of Wales and his brothers.

First Official Visit

THEIR Majesty's first official visit to Canada in 1901 is recalled with pleasure by many thousands of Canadians from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The Duke of Cornwall, as he was then, had just passed his thirty-sixth birthday when he arrived at Quebec City on board H.M.S. Empress, with the Duchess, whom he had married eight years previously. The Earl of Mayo, was then Governor-General. Sir Wilfrid Laurier had been Prime Minister five years.

From the moment the heir apparent and his Consort set foot on Canadian soil on the morning of September 16, till their departure from Halifax on October 21, they received on every side unmistakable evidence of the deep regard Canadians hold for the Royal Family. The St. Lawrence was crowded with craft jammed with well-wishers, and the historic streets of old Quebec echoed again and again to the shouts of cheers as their Lord Highnesses opened their tour. Before going on to Montreal, the Duke reviewed 5,000 troops on the Plains of Abraham.

Visiting Ottawa and other cities, the Duke passed medals to the Canadian who took part in the South African War. Everywhere the Duke and Duchess were given enthusiastic reception. They proceeded westward by the Northern route, through Winnipeg and Calgary to Vancouver and Victoria.

In Toronto, on the homeward journey, the Duke and Duchess were met by the Duke of the great crowd which cheered and shouted, the Duke of a well-wishing shout on the City Hall steps. Visiting many other cities en route, the royal party went on to Halifax.

Made Famous Speech

IMMEDIATELY on his return to England, King George had been proclaimed Prince of Wales and his father having ascended the throne, the Prince spoke at the Guildhall function a few weeks later of the impressions he had gained overseas, of the great starts of country yet unexplored, the hidden wealth calling for development, the vast expanses of virgin soil ready to yield profitable returns to settlers. . . . And all this can be expounded on conditions of healthy life, honest laws and free institutions, in return for overworked cities and an almost hopeless struggle for existence.

It was following his first visit that the King showed he had made no mere ceremonial visit when he told the great Guildhall gathering that the Old Country must "wake up" if she was to realize the opportunities offered and maintain her pre-eminent place among nations.

On his visit to Canada in 1906, two years before he ascended the throne, the Prince of Wales, now the King, was again greeted by the great French Canadian Prime Minister, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. His Royal Highness handled Earl Grey, then Governor-General, a sum of money publicly subscribed for the purchase of the Hotel de Abraham as a national possession. A coronation review and a pageant of Canadian history were among the functions in which he took pleasure before leaving Canada in 1906.

But Few Have Survived

A TYPICAL of all the great and common of the world at present, separation of the Dominions, and including such in decadent nations as the Vatican City, provides a total of only three rulers or heads of government.

On all the far only three names prior to King George. They are King Vidor of Sweden, the 1906 King Haakon of Norway, 1905, and King Gustaf of Sweden, 1907.

Death, however, is not the only one, and each has received a good many, including some who had been to the throne. After His Majesty ascended the throne in 1910, a long list of contemporaries who will not live in the number. The names are: King Nicholas of Russia, married with his family in 1917, and the former Emperor Wilhelm of Germany.

King Albert of the Belgians, a staunch friend of peace and war, was killed in a fall while climbing one of his own castles. King Alfonso of Spain, whose reign was related by his marriage, remained a solitary exile from his country as do many others.

HAD QUEEN VICTORIA LIVED TODAY

By ALEX. SUTHERLAND.

He sits upon the throne of Edward, King George's throne, and holds within his hand the scepter of the British Empire. Around his person, the world's eyes are turned. A world of eyes, from the North Pole to the South Pole, from the East to the West.

The sound of his voice is heard in the ears of the world. He speaks to the world, and the world listens. He is the voice of the British Empire, the voice of the world.

Our faith in the King is not shaken. We know that he is the voice of the British Empire, the voice of the world. We know that he is the voice of the British Empire, the voice of the world.

Passing of Time.
We had passed the time of the King's reign. We had passed the time of the King's reign. We had passed the time of the King's reign. We had passed the time of the King's reign.

The Modern Day.
The King's reign is a modern day. The King's reign is a modern day. The King's reign is a modern day. The King's reign is a modern day.

From a Portrait of Her Most Excellent Majesty Queen Mary workmen. We could not help but notice what a wonderful thing it would be possible to read our good Queen and her companions, one of the most beautiful and noble of the world's monarchs, in the midst of a modern day.

But this time she would be able to see the world as it is. She would be able to see the world as it is. She would be able to see the world as it is. She would be able to see the world as it is.

How happy she would be as he turned to her. How happy she would be as he turned to her. How happy she would be as he turned to her. How happy she would be as he turned to her.

What Queen Could See

OF 1814, we would explain to her that the great world of today is a world of peace and progress. We would explain to her that the great world of today is a world of peace and progress. We would explain to her that the great world of today is a world of peace and progress.

How curious her Majesty would gaze into the faces of the world. How curious her Majesty would gaze into the faces of the world. How curious her Majesty would gaze into the faces of the world. How curious her Majesty would gaze into the faces of the world.

Now as the world approached, we would show her the power of the world. We would show her the power of the world. We would show her the power of the world. We would show her the power of the world.

Parliament of Man

She would be interested in the world of today. She would be interested in the world of today. She would be interested in the world of today. She would be interested in the world of today.

One question, however, asked by her Majesty, could give us food for deep thought. It would be, "Why is the world of today so different from the world of 1814?"

your affairs?" because, to the writer, one of the greatest wonders of modern times is the educated, well-informed and intelligent man, who, without resorting to the cheap claptrap of trading on the name of the Queen, is able to speak of the world of today.

What, these educated men, who are responsible for the success of the world, have to say to the world of today? What, these educated men, who are responsible for the success of the world, have to say to the world of today?

A Better Human Race

IN 1814, the world was a world of war and conflict. In 1814, the world was a world of war and conflict. In 1814, the world was a world of war and conflict. In 1814, the world was a world of war and conflict.

One quarter of a century has passed. Since Britain called him to her august throne. He remained out of court for months. Who loved his ship as England loves her sea.

Though war had torn the whole world apart, the King's ship was the only one that was not. The King's ship was the only one that was not.

New nations of the world on British seas. And there they were, the King's ship, the King's ship, the King's ship, the King's ship.

And there they were, the King's ship, the King's ship, the King's ship, the King's ship. And there they were, the King's ship, the King's ship, the King's ship, the King's ship.

And there they were, the King's ship, the King's ship, the King's ship, the King's ship. And there they were, the King's ship, the King's ship, the King's ship, the King's ship.

And there they were, the King's ship, the King's ship, the King's ship, the King's ship. And there they were, the King's ship, the King's ship, the King's ship, the King's ship.

Strived to Save World From Horrors of War

WAR came. The King, who had been crowned in 1911, had to face the horrors of war. He had to face the horrors of war. He had to face the horrors of war. He had to face the horrors of war.

At Delhi Ceremonies
The King and Queen, who had been crowned in 1911, had to face the horrors of war. He had to face the horrors of war. He had to face the horrors of war. He had to face the horrors of war.

As it turned out, their visit to India served a good purpose. The King and Queen, who had been crowned in 1911, had to face the horrors of war. He had to face the horrors of war. He had to face the horrors of war. He had to face the horrors of war.

The Durbar was held on December 12, 1911, at Delhi. Millions of Indians were present. The King and Queen, who had been crowned in 1911, had to face the horrors of war. He had to face the horrors of war. He had to face the horrors of war. He had to face the horrors of war.

Wherever they went, great celebrations and ceremonies were held. The King and Queen, who had been crowned in 1911, had to face the horrors of war. He had to face the horrors of war. He had to face the horrors of war. He had to face the horrors of war.

Royalty's Brighter Side

DISPENSE the seriousness of the work they have to do, the King and Queen enjoy a brighter side to life. It is not a case of all work and no play.

Biographers record many occasions when the King and Queen forgot, seemingly, their position. One such occasion was during the war, when the King was visiting the trenches in France. When lunch time came, there were no canteen marks, and the King ate a box lunch, along with the other men, as a staff, standing up, using a flat ear as a table.

There are occasions when the Queen, whom one is told is always so formal, reverts to her childhood. One such occasion was when she was a girl, quite innocent of the fact that she was a girl, quite innocent of the fact that she was a girl.

The interest of the entire Royal Family in the affairs of the people is not just a matter of duty, but it is a real interest. The interest of the entire Royal Family in the affairs of the people is not just a matter of duty, but it is a real interest.
